7 EDITORIAL GREASE

Diet Man Strikes Back in the Revenge of the Killer Carbohydrate; tussling with fatty bacon, soggy chips and mounds of pink blancmange, he manages to tell us about the games, the names and the claims to fame. It all sounds the same.

8 THE WORD

Little snipp-ettes on SHINOBI, MARS COPS and GREEN GILBERT, 10 things you didn't know about Ken, and just why there's a black cat next to a box of SANX-ION.

31 LLOYD'S RRAP

Our favourite paper-bag wearer basks in the luxury of five pages, chats about a crapp rap, gives us another cartoon and does it all his way.

36 CHUCK VOMIT

Chuck spews up some severed heads, retches a couple of minced billy-goats and regurgitates this month's software selection.

39 ZZAP! CLASSIFIEDS

The only classifieds column in the cosmos that wore a condom before it came out.

41 SCORES

The Scorelord gets all bashful, turns bright red and refuses to say anything.

47 RESULTS

Flushed after his Hotline success, Ken D Fish takes us on a tour of subaquatic wonder, gives us those 0898 numbers in full, and tells us the one BIG thing that's going to be on ZZAP! next month. Anchovy smells abound.

50 WALKER'S PUDDING AT GAS MARK 4

Martin 'Axe-person' Walker tells it to you straight. Mix the flour, eggs, sugar and milk together, stir in the currants and plums, and cook the lot in a medium oven for an hour.

52 DR FREY'S ZZUPERSTORE

Is he a man or a chicken? Does he really torture small children and teddy bears? No, but he's got bargains a-plenty and games more than twenty.

86 COR BLIMEY!

Strewth! I was off out for some Lilian Gish for me Kidney punch when this geezer comes up to me and sez 'Oi, mush! Did you spill my salmon and trout?' So I kicks 'im in the orchestra stalls, gi's 'im an Oliver Twist in the Newington Butts and gets 'im to write this month's Budget section. That showed 'im.

89 PORCINE PREVIEWS

More pigs than you can comfortably eat introduce a trotter of FORGOTTEN WORLDS, a haunch of AAARGH!, a BOMBER wrapped in tripe, and a couple of MYSTERY GAMES boiled inside a black pudding.

COMPETITION RULES The Editor's decision is final in all matters relating to adjudication and while we offer prizes in good faith, believing them to be available, if something untoward happens (like a game that has been offered as a prize being scrapped) we reserve the right to substitute prize of comparable value. We'll do our very best to despatch prizes as soon as possible after the published closing date. Winners' names will appear in a later issue of ZZAP!. No correspondence can be entered into regarding the competitions (unless we've written to you stating that you have won a prize and it doesn't turn up, in which case drop Vivien Vickress or Caroline Blake a line at the PO Box 10 address). No person who has any relationship, no matter how remote, to anyone who works for either Newsfield or any of the companies offering prizes, may enter one of our competitions—and that includes fish.

No material may be reproduced in part or in whole without the written consent of the copyright-holders. We cannot undertake to return anything sent into ZZAP!—including written and photographic material, hardware or software—unless it is accompanied by a suitably stamped, addressed envelope. Unsolicited written or photographic material is welcome, and if used in the magazine is paid for at our current rates. Ken The Fish appears courtesy of Ken The Fish, except when he doesn't.

When the boat comes back

The last week of this month's schedule brought with it all the Sizzlers you'll find in this issue – no less than seven of them! The best of the 64 crop includes Renegade III, Silkworm and Run The Gauntlet; on the Amiga side, we've got Voyager (one of the best 16-bit games we've seen), Cybernoid 2 (an example of just how to upgrade a brilliant 8-bit game), War In Middle Earth and Robocop.

In this month's instalment you'll also find... a couple of features – an exploration of the current console boom (page 12), the traditional eeh-bah-gum ZZAP! Games Index (with added shoes – page 43) and no less than 12 pages of tips (beginning on p. 56)! Maff's been a regular busy beaver, hasn't he, readers?

On an entirely different note, the first person to write in and correctly identify the April fool was... wait for it... Simon Hadlington of Stourbridge. What's his special April Fool's prize? Nothing at all – sorry Simon, but we are unbelievably miserable and perverse around here and we're always thinking up sick jokes like that one. For any of you who are still wondering, the April Fool was the 64 hydraulic chair in The Word and not, as several of you thought, the Joystick Junkies feature.

But perhaps the biggest news this month is the fact that we've reeled in a new staff writer. We went out in the ZZAP! Trawler, lost our way somewhere in the North Sea, caught one of the biggest mackerel we could find, and fed it to the new man at ZZAP! Towers. And what better way to let you get to know him than for him to write his own introduction? Take it away, Paul...

Awreet, marra. Me name's Paul Rand. A'sseventeen year owld, an' a come from a borin' little pit village called Easington (which isn't anywhere near Newcastle at all!). A've gorra Commodore 64, and hods er games fer it, an' a think it's reely hellish. Me favourite games are Operation Wolf, Robocop an' Gunship, but a'll play owt, reely, as long as it's not git crap.

A like listenin' tu Tha Smiths, and Erasure, and stuff like that, yer naa. An' me favourite pastime is gannin down the pub fer a pint an' a tab. Cos a like beer an tabs, me. An' am THAT haaard, cos'er it. And that's about it, reely, yer naa. Teraa.

Translations on the back of a postcard, please. If any of you did understand it, we'd like to point out that what Paul does is illegal and should not be encouraged in any form. Anyway, I'm sure you'll all make our newest pseudo-Geordie recruit feel very welcome.

Next issue is the Anniversary ZZAP! (cue dramatic fanfare and gasps from hords of tearful millions). Yes! We're 50 copies old from 18th April. What have we got planned? Well, you can ring Ken D Fish's hotline 0898-555085 if you want the full details, but let's just say it's going to be packed with all the stuff that makes this still the best selling Commodore magazine in Britain... Teraa now.

BIG GREEN BOGEY-BITS

We received a delightful little package the other day, containing a wobbly, sticky, uurgy head. Not any old head, mind you – it belonged to that alien hunk, Gilbert, star of ITV's Get Fresh and Gilbert's Fridge. Mysterious, eh?

Days later, what fell through the letterbox but a press release plugging the latest game from Again Again? And who was it based on? Yussir, the lad himself, Gilbert. It seems that his chums back on the planet Drill aren't too happy about his bragging and boasting of megastardom, and have decided to remove pieces of his ship, the Millenium Dustbin, in an attempt to stop him returning to Earth to record a new series.

Can you help Gilbert in his search for fame, fortune and bits of spacecraft? Look for Gilbert—Escape from Drill in mid April, at a price of £9.99 on cassette and £14.99 disk. OK – you can take your fingers out of your nose now.

YUSS! IT'S THE THALAPUSS

Thalamus, never the sort to ride on the back of a tacky publicity gimmick, have appointed a new PR executive. Office pet, Rocky the Cat, can be seen in the photograph promoting the Spectrum remix of Thalamus' fantastic debut title on the C64, Sanxion.

After a long and informative meeting with Rocky, we were also informed of the imminent release of Amiga conversions of Hawkeye and Armalyte, Thalamus' first foray into the world of the 16-bit big boy. Commenting on these products, Rocky told us 'Mew mew neeeeeeeow Mew Mewooooow'. But then, puddy cats are like that, aren't they? (Cries of WOOZY-WOOZY and GAGA ensue).

ECTO AND ENDO MORPH

SIZZLING SILVERBIRDS!

It seems that everybody's jumping on the compilation bandwagon these days, doesn't it? Not content with making pots and pots of hard cash by selling cheap games on their own, Silverbird have come up with the profit-raising brainwave of lobbing three of their best-selling budget titles onto one cassette, and flogging it at the ridiculously modest price of £2.99.

The three lucky titles are BMX KIDZ, NINJA MASTER and ROCK 'N' WRESTLE; the compilation is called the 1-2-3 PACK and it should be available by the time you get your mitts on this mag (i.e. now). Buy or die.

DELUXE PAINT STRIKES BACK (AGAIN)

Just a quickie, to tell you about the imminent release of the latest in the family of what has to be Electronic Arts' most successful series. Deluxe Paint III, from the keyboard of Dan Silva, makes its debut on Amiga screens sometime this month, boasting an impressive array of new features.

■ As well as enhancements to the existing package, such as an improved airbrush and Direct Overscan Printing (allowing you to view and edit your creations in the border), Deluxe Paint III has another major advantage over its rivals: the power of animation.

■ One of the more bandied-about words connected with this part of the program is AnimPaint (tm). This gives you the power of painting on multiple animation frames as simply as on just one still picture. Pretty snazzy stuff, eh? The user can also define Animated Brushes, which lets you define an animation, pick it up and use it just as you would any other brush. Cooooor! The whole thing is IFF and ANIM file compatible, and the only snag is that you'll need a 1 Meg expansion to use it.

■ 'So when can I get hold of it?' Well, about now, and at a retail price of £79.99. The good news is that you can trade in your old DPI and II, and purchase the new program for £50 (DPI) or £30 (DPII), both with £5 postage. Hoorah, as Prince George would say.

HEAVING HEWSON BEAUTIES

Yes, they're all Compilations Ker-Razy this month (and why not? Crap Barry Norman Gags Inc.). This time it's Hewson, with some fab news for all you slaving Amiga junkies out there. They're due to release a 4-game package which includes a ZZAP! Gold Medal and a never-before-released title! Entitled The Premier Collection, the games in question are Netherworld, Zynaps, Nebulus (the Gold Medal winner) and Exolon (the one that's never been released before). The latter will only be available to Amiga owners via this compilation – which is one of many good reasons for buying it.

Anyway, it'll cost £29.99 (that's £7.50 a game), and it should be out now. Save up those coppers, Roger.

"G'DAY ALL AUSSIE VIEWERS! ITS THOSE WACKY 180° SHOTS AGAIN!"

COP A LOADA THESE MARTIANS

Around two years in the making and onto its second programmer, Mars Cops is almost ready to rear its digital head for Amiga and 64 owners everywhere.

● During a routine fly-past of Neptune by the Voyager II exploration satellite in December 1989, traces of carbon life were detected on the inhospitable red planet. Lasting only seven minutes, it was assumed a malfunction had occurred, and nothing more was said. Forty years later, after numerous space 'accidents', alien beings are discovered on Neptune, intent on a full-scale assault on the inner planets of the Solar System.

● As Charles Matthews, officer of U.I.P.F. (The Mars Cops), you have been assigned to stop the outer space onslaught before the planets are annihilated. Pretty awesome task, don't you think? Don't worry, if you should fail, there's always your relief, Julianne, to finish the job.

● It all sounds as if it's going to be a bit hectic out there. Plans are afoot to incorporate a simulator, which can be switched on or off depending on your particular gaming tastes. The Amiga price is rumoured to be £19.99 – check it out.

SALES CURVE VIRGIN ON SEGA SHINOBI

If you liked the look of the Silkworm conversion (reviewed, p.70), you'll be interested to know that the next release from The Sales Curve is Shinobi – a home version of the Sega coin-op.

Never heard of it? Well, according to the rumours we heard, it's already been an arcade smash, 'holding the number one slot as the biggest and fastest selling game' in the arcades. Stocks of the Sega console version sold out within a few days and – well, we thought it was a pretty unspectacular coin-op, actually.

If you were keen on it, though, both the Amiga and 64 versions looked pretty impressive – from what we've seen. It'll be released in the next couple of months by Virgin; reviews (hopefully) next ish. Onward, Patsy.

TRIANGLE CRAZY

How would you like the opportunity to be totally patronised by Nick Owen? Waddayamean, yes!? Oh well, you'll get your chance sometime in April, courtesy of CDS Software, who've just secured the license for the popular but not very easy television quiz game, Sporting Triangles.

At a price of £8.95 for cassette and £14.95 disk, you'll secure your right to sit in front of a greasy ex-TV-AM front man, and get lots and lots of obscure questions wrong. Fun, fun, fun.

10 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW ABOUT KEN D FISH

There have been many Fish Megastars over the ages – Jack Spratt, Orca (well – nearly), Jaws, Grimsby's own Harry The Haddock – but none quite like our Ken D Fish. But did you know he had a seedier side? Did you know that he used to be a mere washer-up in the local bistro? That he once had to sell off his own spawn to finance a Corporate Subaquatic Business Venture in the old days? 10 facts below await the interested fish-coaxer...

- ☆ Ken was born to parents Barbie and Craig in 2092 FR (Fish Reckoning) at a small weir in a Thames tributary. His age is politely coughed over.
- ★ Our underwater chum's fishy fluids are legendary – on sale in most health food shops, they are rumoured to cure arthritis, disorders of the bowel and sanity.
- ☆ The piscatorial pleasure purveyor picked a peck of pickled pepper.
- ★ Kenneth's middle name is 'The'; he finds it rather amusing to adopt a pseudo 19th Century American negroid slave tone by calling himself 'D'. This is his only weakness.
- ☆ Our Fishy Fluid Friend has appeared in a wide variety of media – on tv (football matches), in magazines (ZZAP! and Trout Tickler Monthly), on the radio, (The Archers), in the movies (friend of Orca) and in computer games (a bit-part in Mermaid Madness).
- ★ Ken hates Maff – though the reason is unknown.
- ☆ The subaquatic Megastar refused an appearance on Wogan because the Irish chat show host refused to provide Gold Flake at the right temperature.
- ★ The plankton of his mother's eye, Ken has nonetheless not seen his parents for 30 years – and he has 8,000,000 brothers and sisters yet to visit!
- ☆ Though relatively youthful, Ken denies being a virgin – in fact, he has indirectly sired a chimpanzee, a horse and two brothers called Brian and Michael through genetic restructuring.
- ★ Ken's best friends are a chicken called Samson and a porcupine called Alan. Neither are available for comment.

STUCK WITH JOY?

De Gale Marketing have just released a new joystick onto an unsuspecting market. The Quick Joy Supercharger has a host of functions which, according to the PR blurb, 'make it a game player's dream'. Hmm.

So what's it got? Well, it's got six microswitches, four suction pads on the base, two fire buttons (one on the top, one a bit lower), a standard Atari 9-pin plug and an autofire button. It costs £12.95 and is available about now-ish. And that's it, really: except to say that you get what you pay for.

HOLY HARWOOD MEXICAN GRINGO LOGO ORGY!

Amiga mail-order gadgis Gordon Harwood Computers are in a bit of a tizzy. Their advert features a little gringo-ish person, affectionately known as 'Harwood's Hombre' (see above). Being bored silly with that title, they've decided to set a bit of a compo-ette. What they want you to do is forward them suggestions for a new name for their chilli-chappie (good, eh?) – the sender of the best one wins a special prize! Are you Console Ker-r-razy?

In the house of the future, everything will be mechanised – so you and your ideal family will have plenty of time to fiddle about with the knobs on your holographic CD. Oh yeah – and play with the latest example of home entertainment technology; that lean, mean unit in the corner – your games machine. Apparently, there's a good chance that by the year 2000 some kind of console will have wormed its way into practically everybody's home. Which is fine for the people who'll be in their teens then, but what about now?

Walk down your average high street and scan the classifieds of your favourite magazines and you'll soon realise that as far as consoles go, the simple days are over. Way before the first rubber-keyed Speccy ever made it off the production line, if you wanted to play those blippy bat 'n' ball arcade games, you had to get yourself a console (just slip in the cartridge and you're ready to go).

Now you've got choice. Lots of choice: there's more info coming your way on the Nintendo, Sega, PC Engine, Konix and even ST and Amiga consoles, than you've got intestines to digest. Which should you get? Are they worth all the hype? Should you raid your piggybank, rob your granny or sell your racing bike to get one? Is it time to start saving up? What's happened to the universe anyway? Where are we going? Aargh!!!

Well, twist not your Easycare, Y-fronted underpants, because ZZAP! is about to tell you everything (well, OK, not absolutely everything) you ever wanted to know. About consoles. Not rubber underwear.

GOLDEN OLDIES NINTENDO (8-BIT)

This isn't the hottest looking machine in town (it looks pretty much like a souped up shoebox with a couple of add-ons) but it's one of the most popular games machines in the USA and Japan where it's supposed to have sold over 10 million units. Wow!

So what's it got? 52 colours, 256-by-240 pixel resolution and 64 sprites, that's what. What that means for the geezer in the street who can't tell his pixel resolution from his belly-fluff is loads of fast-moving action games and some pretty impressive arcade conversions – graphically much better than the 64, on the whole.

The console comes in one of two packages: Basic and Deluxe. Basic is just what it says – the console unit, power supply, two controllers (that's a directional rocker button and a couple of fire buttons instead of a joystick) and a copy of Super Mario Bros. Remember the arcade game? Well, this is almost exactly the same, plays just as brilliantly and, if you've got the cash, is almost worthwhile buying the whole console for in itself. Where else could you get an arcade machine for under a hundred quid?

The Deluxe package has almost all the same features (no Super Mario Bros though) plus a light gun, a robot – 'ROB' – and a couple of games (Duck Hunt and Gyromite) thrown in. Lightgun in your holster, you can take part in real fairground-style shooting. Just point the gun at the screens and try to hit the ducks.

Play Gyromite and you can actually get ROB to operate some of the game with you. He picks up and drops gyroscopes in the game and interacts with the screen by performing different arm movements. Cor.

At the mo, you can play around 40 or so different Nintendo titles (just slot in your cartridge and you're ready to go). A lot of the older ones are pretty simple old-fashioned style arcade games (Donkey Kong, Mario Brothers, that sort of thing) but some of the newer stuff is a lot more complicated with explore-and-map arcade adventures like Legend of Zelda, and Gradius – a really fast-action conversion of the arcade hit Nemesis. And pretty good they are too!

The main disadvantage is the price and availability of games. A library of 40 or so possible buys isn't exactly mega-large, although Nintendo have committed themselves to releasing at least two or three new games a month over the coming year. A basic Donkey Kong type jaunt can set you back about £20 quid and new

SEGA (8-BIT)

If you don't want a console just to play games but need it to colour-coordinate with your sunglasses as well, then take a look at the Sega Master System – it's cool, it's sleek, it's black and it looks more like a spaceship than a shoebox.

For something that's been around in the UK for just slightly longer than the Nintendo, the Sega has definitely taken off. Big promotion in the high street stores means that they were going like crazy this Christmas, so software support (which hasn't exactly been brilliant up till now) is starting to look good.

At £79.95 for a console, light gun, controller and one game, it comes just that extra bit cheaper, though there's scope for buying extras like joysticks and 3D glasses for games like Zaxxon 3D.

Games come in three formats (Sega card, Mega Cartridge and Two Mega Cartridge) which range in price between £15 and £30 quid. Most of them are more mainstream coin-op conversions (Out Run, Enduro Racer, Space Harrier) which aren't exactly perfect but do the job at least as well, if not better than, most 8-bit computers around.

The graphics (up to 64 colours on screen, 256-by-192 resolution) are colourful but not all that sophisticated and the sound can be bit of a disappointment.

If you've decided on this price-range (and £80 quid is pretty tempting) and can't make up your mind whether to get this or the Nintendo the main points to consider are what sort of games you really want to play (mainstream Sega conversions, or equally addictive, but less well-known cutesy Nintendo style), how much you're prepared to pay for a game and how big a collection of games you really want. On the whole, the Sega has more software support and the games are cheaper but it doesn't boast any product to match the classic Super Mario Bros on the Nintendo.

Confused? Upset? Don't know which to get? Want us to tell you which to buy? We-e-e-ll, we think you should get . . . erm . . . well . . . whichever one you decide you like best. We're not mind-readers round here you know.

PRICE: £79.95 for console, two controllers and one game; Mastersystem Plus £99.95 with the above and Light Gun; Supersystem £129.95 for the above plus 3D glasses. Currently on special offer.
SPECIAL FEATURES: light gun, 3D glasses, Control stick available.

SOFTWARE AVAILABILITY: a wide range of titles, including several older and newer Sega coin-op conversions. Increased console sales means that there should be strong software support over the next couple of years.

releases come in at between £30 and £40. Bit hard on your piggy-bank that.

OK, so the Nintendo doesn't sport gameplay as sophisticated as the 64 or as arcade perfect as the PC Engine, but it's still a great games machine (especially for the younger games player), with a fair number of really addictive arcade titles to its name. Better than that – it's cheap!

PRICE: Basic £99.95, Deluxe £149.95 (prices reduced by about £10 if you buy from Toys 'R' Us)
SPECIAL FEATURES: optional light gun and robot
SOFTWARE AVAILABILITY: 30-40 titles (£20-£40) available now but Nintendo have pledged to release two or three new games a month over the coming year. No independent software available.

PC ENGINE

OK, guys. Ever felt like maybe you fancied owning an arcade machine? Sick of sticking those ten pees into somebody else's slots (oo-er)?

Well, here's something that's gonna blow your mind. For just about the same price as a 64, you can get your hands on the ultimate arcade experience for about 30 quid a time.

Yup, the machine that's been selling like hotcakes in Japan for about a year and a half has just become available in Britain by mail order (there are no plans to release it in the shops just yet). It's only about 5" square (and that's small enough to fit into a shoebox), comes in cool and trendy white and loads games from data cards even smaller than a standard size pack of playing cards.

The kind of games available range from really brilliant – and when we say brilliant we mean practically indistinguishable from the original – arcade conversions (R-Type, Dragon Spirit, Vigilante), through fairly complicated text-style adventures to completely original PC Engine programmed games. Obviously they've been put together with the Japanese market in mind. Remember Clive James and Endurance. Well, Chan and Chan is a bit like that: the hero's a bright and bouncy adult Japanese who braves several levels of Super Mario Bros-style arcade style action, with nothing but a pretty hefty kick and the sort of virulent fart that fells everything in its path! Juicy, eh?

Right now the Engine is only generally available in Japan, so obviously a lot of the games have been written in Japanese and aren't that much good to us over here. Don't get all hot and bothered though, 'cos by mid-summer NEC should have introduced a completely redesigned Engine into the States, so there'll obviously be a bit more English speaking software out by then.

If you're an arcade addict, then the PC Engine (it's only 8-bit but it's got 512 colours and 256-by-216 resolution) is the console to save up for. Just remember – the main thing to consider about the Engine is this: do you want the nearest thing to an arcade machine for about the price of a second-hand Amiga (though not exactly the same sort of flexibility) and about 30 quid a game? If the answer is YES and you can't be bothered to wait for the Konix console and the 16-bits, then check that there PC Engine out.

CD-ROM AND OTHER BITZ

An extra £289.95 plus £159.95 (for the interface) buys you a CD-ROM player. Only two games use it at the moment but it has the potential for adding near-perfect speech and digital stereo compact disc music, as well as 600 extra megabytes of memory per disk. Oh yeah – and it works just like a top-quality CD player as well. Cor!

PRICE: £199.95 for the Engine, UK powerpack, joypad and SCART Euroconnector (connects to most monitors and several newer TVs). £224.95 for the same package but a TV modulator instead of a SCART.

SPECIAL FEATURES: CD-ROM player plus interface, and Commander joypad (with autofire) available now. Joystick plus interface should be available soon.

SOFTWARE AVAILABILITY: of approximately 62 titles available in Japan, around 20 or so are available by mail order over here. There's a good chance of that increasing towards the end of the year when the Engine goes on sale in America.

LOOK INTO MY CRYSTAL BALL, ERIC

Erm... well, we can't predict the future but we do know what you could be expecting to pay out for over the next couple of years. So what's there to look forward to?

THE KONIX MULTI-SYSTEM

If you thought this lot had their plates more than filled by joysticks and mice and all that sort of stuff, you were wrong, mate. The Konix Multi-System (the control unit can become a car steering wheel, aircraft controls or bike handlebars) was launched a couple of months back and should be ready and waiting for hungry joystick junkies later on this year. Software comes on three-and-a-half inch disks and there are loads of peripherals like lightguns and even an arcade chair in the pipeline.

Although plenty of software houses are already planning to produce Konix software, no one's actually seen any playable software up and running – but with 4096 colours and 512-by-200 resolution it should look pretty good.

PRICE: £199 for basic unit plus Konix joystick

SPECIAL FEATURES: adaptable control unit, foot pedal, 3D glasses, lightgun with recoil action, helicopter stick and arcade-style power chair to retail at around £170

SOFTWARE AVAILABILITY: unlike Sega and Nintendo, Konix won't be monopolising the production of their own games. Companies like US Gold, Mirrorsoft, Thalamus, Palace and Logotron are all getting ready for the launch. With a bit of luck there should be loads around – eventually.

NINTENDO AND SEGA (16-BIT)

Both of these are already on sale in Japan but the only thing we've seen of the Nintendo is a piccy – and very nice and sleek it looks too. The Sega 16-bit is supposed to be going on sale in the UK later on this year but as it hasn't even been released in America yet and the 8-bit seems to have a lot of life in it still, that may be postponed. We've seen one and it looks pretty good but the graphics and scrolling weren't quite as impressive as we'd been led to expect. Still – it's early days yet and the Sega Mega Drive may prove to be just as popular as the Master System. More info as and when we get it.

THE REST OF THE BUNCH

Rumours are flying left right and centre about possible development of an ST and even an Amiga console, but so far it's been mainly speculation. Basically, you'll have machines capable of running arcade-style software (at around £25) of the standard you'd get on your full-blown computer but for around half the price or less. It's aimed at younger gamers who won't necessarily be interested in the programming, musical, role-playing and adventure possibilities a 16-bit computer has to offer. We'll believe it when we see it.

SHOULD I GET A CONSOLE THEN?

- ★ Basically, a console is a games machine. You just slot in your cartridge or stick in your data card and almost immediately the game is ready to play. Even 16-bit computers like the Amiga can't compete in terms of loading speed. So if all you want to do with your computer is play arcade games and you're sure you'll never want to program, it's definitely worth considering a console.
- ★ There just isn't as much software available and you can't get hold of it in as many places as you can buy games for your 64 or your Amiga.
- ★ Console software comes pretty expensive. Average price is around £25 and a new full-price game can set you back around £40 quid. Phwoar!
- ★ If you're into adventures or complicated flight sims which need about 25 different keys to work, you won't get as much pleasure out of a console. They don't really cater for anything other than pure arcade addicts.
- ★ If you're after some of the hottest arcade conversions around, it's definitely worth considering the PC Engine. For £60 quid you get what's practically the equivalent of an R-Type arcade machine; for £30 you get Vigilante and Dragon Spirit.

So you've seen the screenshots, you've read the hype. Now what? Which machine's gonna be gracing your house of the future? Is this really the best time to get a console? Well, with its practically arcade perfect graphics and brilliant gameplay the PC Engine is definitely the hottest thing around. Up here it's had all of us panting and slobbering, with our tongues hanging out ever since we first saw it, but with the Konix and all the other stuff just around the corner, you might fancy hanging around a bit to see what that's like. Whatever you decide to do, one thing's for certain – the consoles market is never gonna be the same again!

Run The «GAUNTLET»

Ocean, C64 £9.99 cassette, £14.99 disk

Martin Shaw hasn't really come a long way since his days as Doyle in The Professionals, has he? In the 70s, starring in shows where he gets blown up and stuff like that; in the 80s, starring in shows where other people get blown up and things like that.

And if you haven't seen it, that's exactly what happens in the telly show on which Run The Gauntlet is based.

The show goes like this. You, as head of one of four international teams, must run the gauntlet of a range of physically and mentally exhausting trials.

These tests consist of a lot of jumping into high-powered land and water vehicles – hovercraft, jet-bikes, Supercats (you know, those big truck things with the six tractor wheels, like they used to have on Blake's Seven).

Not that you can get away with simply steering round a course under petrol-power. Nope – you've gotta use your legs too, 'cos the ultimate killer in this physical ability contest is The Wall. This

▼ Now THIS is what Jet Bike Simulator could have turned out like

Isn't Martin Shaw soooo hard! Running around with a microphone, while those poor people run themselves into a cardiac arrest on the course! There hasn't been oodles of time spent on graphical niceties in Run The Gauntlet. That's not to say that they're no good. Nosiree – it's just that they're very... erm... workmanlike, which I suppose reflects the game's style. All the different sprites move around in quite a realistic way – I particularly liked the spray coming out of the back of the boats. Action is fast and hectic, with the opposition forever on your back, spurring you on. It's also HARD! Especially The Hill, which is a real joystick smasher! If you like your action mean, nippy and well'aard, get Run The Gauntlet – it's even got Martin Shaw on the title screen!!!

I've always fancied a ride on a moon-buggy. All that bumping around and getting sprayed with loads of mud – whoarr! Yeah well, you don't get any mud in this version but you do get loads of gameplay. Once you've got used to the control method you can go really wild, roaring round the tracks and the water courses. Admittedly, the graphics aren't that great but the animation, especially on the jeeps, is pretty smooth. In fact, apart from the wall section (I can't really get excited about a load of joystick wobble), the whole thing reminds me of the sort of games you play with your toy cars or boats on courses in the sandpit when you're a kid. It may not look all that good from the outside but it's really great when you're the one in charge.

▼ Buggy-bouncing fun in Ocean's cute 'n' cuddly Run The Gauntlet has you running through mud and all sorts of other wet, sticky, smelly, nasty things and then, just when you think you can't waggle the joystick another step, gets you to scale a 20-odd foot rope wall all the way to the top!

This is great on the telly, because it's got so much action – and that same fast pace has transferred well to the computer version. Run The Gauntlet works because there's a lot of different things to do – hovercraft races, jet-skiing, bombing about in moonbuggies and racing along muddy tracks – you begin to feel knackered just playing it! Cosmetically, the game is on the average side, with sprites ranging from big and chunky to small and dainty, but they're all animated well. There are some nice tunes which make up for the low-key effects but I didn't like the multiloop that much – you're constantly having to rewind and forward the cassette to find the section you need. Other than that, Run The Gauntlet (on both 64 and Amiga versions) is fine by me.

An Amiga version is almost ready, and due for release at about the same time as the C64. Apart from slightly better graphics and sound and a less agonising loader, the game's the same (well – the version we played up at Ocean was, anyway. It'll cost you £24.99 – so check it out!

PRESENTATION 73%

Lots of levels, and the controls feel right once you've got used to it. Multiloop is a pain on cassette, though.

GRAPHICS 67%

Not spectacular but they're well-animated and serve their purpose.

SOUND 69%

A host of tunes and average effects.

HOOKABILITY 81%

The multiloop is a bit long-winded, but the action is hectic and fun.

LASTABILITY 78%

Loads of variation between the levels means many different competitions to play.

OVERALL 80%

A fine conversion of the fun, if agonising, television series.

RENEGADE III

The Final Chapter

Ocean, C64 £9.95 cass, £14.95 disk

● Is our hard hero tough enough to beat up cavemen clubbers and monstrous mummies? Or will he just run away?

Right. You battled your way through Renegade, getting really serious about beating up all those nasty, three-day stubble opponents. In Target Renegade you kicked seven shades of shirt out of those horrible fat-types and their henchmen, and you really enjoyed it. What could worry such a hard guy like you?

Well, it's a question of time – you're stuck in it. As a martial arts hero with street cred and nice trousers you slipped on a time warp banana skin and ended on your backside in the Stone Age. And guess who planted the banana skin? That's right – your old chums The Nasty Gang; what's worse, they've got your girlfriend hostage. (Cries of 'Oh no! Not again!' and 'The rotters!').

This is where you start, faced by squat cavemen with clubs, Tyrannosaurus Rexes and their cutesy offspring (they come out of eggs dropped by birds) and shy, retiring types who only run out of their caves to drop rocks on you. Oh – and then there are natural hazards like holes (like they had in 1 Million Years BC) and lava rivers (Hot Tootsie Simulators) – touching these means instant death.

Of course, you can defend yourself with kicks and punches and ducks, and you can climb around some obstacles and avoid others – and you've got four lives as well. It's going to be easy, isn't it? Boy, are you in for a surprise!

Each of the four levels is a hazardous mission which involves battling with the indigenous inhabitants (I like that phrase – I'll have to use it again), each of whom have their own styles of fighting, all of which are nasty.

Right, so you've cleared the first level – where now? There's no let-up because it's straight off to Egypt to do battle with the living dead (whiffy lot, them), then to Medieval times where knights in shining armour and particularly nasty dragons decide they don't like you, and finally – well, that'd be telling, wouldn't it? Best just not have a shave for three days, do a couple of hours on the Bullworker and get going. You've only got a few million years ahead of you...

This is a great departure from the other two games in the series – they were for serious macho types who like saving gals and can pull a couple of nasal hairs out at once. This is more my kind of game: it contains most of the beat 'em up elements of its successors and adds a touch of humour. That's not to say it's easy – it took me a while to suss out and finish the first level, and after that things start getting really tough. The graphics are some of the prettiest I've seen on a Commodore, with tons of very cute characters and detailed backdrops, and some smart animation. The old format is there – beat things up, survive an onslaught of characters until the scrolling lets you continue, beat more things up and finish the level – but the way it's been used gives Renegade III the kind of addiction the previous two lacked. The best of the lot as far as I'm concerned.

▲ This is one place where you don't want your mummy (Level Two)

A beat 'em up, eh? With mummies and dragons and eagles' eggs that turn into cute little scuttling dingos? What are Ocean playing at? A top-class quality action game, that's what. You'd better believe it, 'cos if you miss out on this you're missing out on the best and most original of the Renegade series to date. Not only have you got fabbo bash 'em into the ground and stamp on their faces action, you've also got brilliant graphics, a great soundtrack and the cutest fighting game in the business. OK, so there are only four levels but beat 'em up action doesn't come much tougher than this, so who cares? Start raiding your piggy bank 'cos this is one of the best possible ways to get rid of ten quid.

▼ Knights on hobby horses are no fun at all – they just keep draining your energy (Level Three)

You might think that with only four levels, Renegade III won't test your gaming skills too much. When you've completed the first level, you might still think that. When you get to the third and you're killed every time by those knights on hobby-horses and that dragon (dragon? It looks more like a flying pig!), you'll know the meaning of frustration! The cassette multiload is just like any other – a bit of a pain if you don't like them, or something you don't bother about; it's not that bad. The rest of the game is pretty impressive – a brilliant soundtrack, cute (and annoying!) characters and a wide range of moves that you can beat them up with. If you liked the previous games in the series, take a look at this – it's got more class than a wet weekend in Newcastle.

"PARP!" "TAPES MAN!"

▲ Level One: avoid the red rivers of lava, kick seven shades of caveman suit out of everything else and don't fall down holes – you might just make it

PRESENTATION 68%

Clear on-screen appearance, decent instructions and a multiload. Nice joystick handling.

GRAPHICS 93%

Well-defined, cartoon quality sprites and backdrops coupled with neat animation. Generally very polished.

SOUND 88%

A choice of some average sound effects or a brilliant soundtrack.

HOOKABILITY 85%

It's fairly easy to progress a little way into the game, and the cute action will keep you coming back.

LASTABILITY 89%

There are only four levels, but the toughness and variety will keep you playing a long time.

OVERALL 90%

Another first-class beat 'em up from Ocean that will give you a laugh or two along the way.

AMIGA

CYBERNOID

THE REVENGE

Hewson, Amiga £19.99

● Hewson's Sizzling sequel to Sizzling Cybernoid

Aaah, this is the life, you think to yourself. Lying back with a long cool drink and a copy of Deathdealer magazine, incorporating Alien Headstompers Monthly. What could be nicer? Soon you reach the adverts in the mag – NEW! QUANTUM SEEKER BOMBS! – PLASMA SHIELDS! SPECIAL OFFER THIS MONTH! Well, the good ship Cybernoid could do with a refit after that last thrash – and what with the reward you can easily afford it. So it's off to the shipyards...

Two months later...
Now you have a virtually new

Well, I didn't think it was possible for Hewson to improve on the 64 version of Cybernoid when they converted it to the Amiga, but they did. Now we've got Cybernoid II and believe it or not, they've improved that as well! The graphics are superb – much better than the original Cybernoid – with some horrible, slimey Giger-esque monsters salivating down the sides of the screen and well dangerous looking gun emplacements. It's still really difficult to begin with, due to the number of aliens swarming about the place, but you soon get used to that. And when it comes for less than twenty quid, how can you afford not to buy it? Oh, you've only got ten pence. Well save up! It's worth it.

▼ 'Aw – he's a push-over – he hasn't got any eyes! WRONG!

craft, with extra weapons and redesigned bodywork, it seems a pity to let it just stand looking nice in some spaceport. So, off you trot to the government buildings – Dangerous and Explosive Space Missions Department.

In you stride – 'Scuse me, 'ave you got any well dangerous missions?'

'Certainly sir. Fill in these 37 forms...

Well all that red tape has left you feeling wound up and ready for a fight. You jump into the Cybernoid II (redesigned, see) and off you blast.

On reaching the site of the battle, a thought strikes you. Those enemies seem rather familiar – the bouncing robots, the scuttling crabs... it's those pirates! Well you saw them off easily enough before, so it's going to be dead easy this time.

WAAAAGH! What the hell was that? Acid dripping from the roof! That wasn't there last time. WOOOH! AGH! What's that thing with the shield doors? Launch a seeker... oh no! The doors closed! Try again while the doors are open... BOOM! Yeah! That's more like it. You don't remember these, do you? Well, that's 'cos it's

▲ If you thought Cybernoid was tough, you haven't confronted those nasty, dripping plants, monsters with shields and Giger-esque heads yet, have you?

Cybernoid II, matey – you've got more weapons than you had the last time but the enemies are worse as well. That's life, eh?

I thought that the Amiga version of Cybernoid was much more playable than the 64 version thanks to the adjusted difficulty level. But the 16-bit Cybernoid II isn't just really playable – the graphics are wonderful too! Whereas the original game had similar scenery on every screen, the sequel has a wide range of varied backdrops and as if that wasn't enough, some of them are even animated! The sound has also been vastly improved with tons more effects and the option of having in-game music. The effects themselves are great, ranging from a laser blip to a hard metallic clunk and the tune is a competent working of the 8-bit original which suits the game well. There's just so much to this that you won't be able to resist playing it time and time again.

THE EXPERT BACKUP CARTRIDGE

- ▶ Most advanced backup cartridge in the world
- ▶ Unlike all other backup systems the expert uses Ram, therefore the backup software loads into the cartridge, because of this the expert is always on top of the latest protection methods
- ▶ Comes with the latest 3.2R software
- ▶ Undetectable by software!
- ▶ Backs up ALL your games!
- ▶ VOTED No. 1 Backup System in Europe!

BACKING UP: No matter how the game was loaded, it will copy from tape/tape, tape/disk, disk/disk, disk/tape. All backups saved in one single file. Cartridge not needed for reloading.

COMPACTOR: Save minimum 3 games per disk side. The expert compacts games making them smaller in length thus enabling faster reload & more games on disk or tape!

FAST LOADERS: Disk fastloader "BOOT" uses no disk space! Loads backups in average 25 seconds. Tape backups reloading takes less than 2 mins!

ROCKET LOADER: Fastest disk loader available. Loads backups in an average 6 SECONDS. That's at least 25 times faster!

MACHINE CODE MONITOR: Best machine code monitor available. Intelligent hardware hides the monitor making it invisible & impossible to detect. Use it to learn machine code, a hackers dream due to it revealing any part of memory. Includes all usual monitor commands & more! Add poke/cheats from magazines.

PRINTOUT: Print out your machine code listings or even your favourite hires or multi-colour screens. Works on all CBM compatible printers.

SPRITE EDITOR & CUSTOMISER: Change all the sprites in a game, customise them with the free easy to use sprite editor.

EXPERT EXPRESS: Turns the Expert into a dedicated fast loading cartridge. It even loads programs over 200 blocks.

CHEAP UPGRADES: You'll never need to send the expert back. Rival products must be sent away for upgrading often costing as much as the product itself. With the expert, watch our advert for the latest software version & send off £3.99 for the disk or tape & instructions!

RAVE REVIEWS: Don't just take our word for it....

"The expert is the best possible buy" (Your CBM Aug'88)

"Highly recommended" (C.C.I. JUNE 88)

ACTION SERVICE

Infogrames, C64 £9.95 cassette, £14.95 disk

It's always the same, isn't it? Off you go, on a nice military coup somewhere in the Pacific. No worries – weather's marvellous, beer's cheap, locals are friendly. Then the fighting bit comes round, someone mucks the job up and you've all got to go back home to the nasty cold climate, with your drill sergeant bawling at you for another six months.

So what happens to that unlucky GI who caused the bother in the first place? No, you don't all beat him repeatedly about the head and neck – you send him back to school. But this is no ordinary school. No sir, it's the Com-

nando Training School.

After kitting yourself out (nice shaven head, Doc Martens, etc) it's straight down to the training course, for some of the meanest workouts a guy will ever have to face. Clamber over 8 foot walls, traverse minefields, dodge machine-gun fire, leap tall buildings in a single bound (well, perhaps not) and avoid ferocious alsatians in this test to find the toughest of the tough, the bravest of the brave, and the most brain-deficient of the mentally unstable.

In addition to basic running mode, different events call for diving (among other things) grenade throwing, kneeling, ladder climbing, jumping, pushups, crawling and dodging. And if you're not reaching for the Ralgex and shouting out 'mother' at the end of all that, you can rest easy in the knowledge that you're the hardest bloke around. Either that, or you've died of exhaustion.

Anyway, if you find the going a little too rough (and the sergeant isn't looking) ... well, you can always cheat a bit and rearrange the whole course using the built-in construction set. That way you get to pick your own obstacles, decorate the landscape, position the height of your soldier in relation to the landscape and set your own

This is very much like the first level of 19, except that the whole game is the same and there are a few extra additions – like people to kick in and shoot and wire thingies to swing across. Everything happens so slowly, though, it's as if the soldier's running through thick mud all the time. It doesn't look very snappy either. The sprites are blocky, and jerk about in a most undignified way; the backgrounds are bare, but the different obstacles are passable. Sound effects add little to the game's atmosphere, consisting of nothing more than simple white noise. The construction kit is a good idea and, had it been faster, might have amounted to a decent addition to the game. As it stands, though, no thank you.

Afterwards, watch exactly how you made a mess of it by rewinding the action on the video screen and setting play in motion.

It's a bad world out there. Make sure you're daft enough to enter it. Train now, in Action Service!

Dear oh dear oh dear. As if people aren't already cheesed off with silly army games, here's another one to get all hot and bothered about. I was hard pressed to find the action mentioned in the game's title, for a start. Everything moves at a snail's pace – if this is really what the army's like, lounge lizards (like Maff) should have no trouble fitting in! The blurb on the back of the box enthuses about 'lifelike graphics with superb sound and speech', but the game itself boasts unsteady sprites (perhaps they had a Stella too many at the bar the other night) with crunchy white noise effects and zilch as far as speech is concerned. Not a product I'd do National Service for.

MAFF

Any fans of Combat Zone and 19 who are looking for yet another army game to add to their collection, stop jumping up and down and getting excited right now – you're in for a disappointment. Unless you've got the sort of warped sense of humour that actually enjoys laughing at blocky, badly animated and incredibly slo-o-ow graphics, that is. Oh yeah – and if you really want to get your teeth into a bit of decent gameplay, forget it 'cos this isn't it. Action! Boring, repetitive and extremely tedious joystick wiggling, more like. Do yourself a favour and give this a miss.

▼ Are you sure you're ready for all this ACTION and EXCITEMENT? Or d'you just wanna lie in bed all day?

amiga

An Amiga version should already be on sale, for a tenner more. It's the same game, but the graphics persuade you to play a little longer. Nothing special.

VOYAGER

Ocean, Amiga £24.99

● Ever wondered what a cross between Battlezone, Backlash and Master of the Lamps would be like? Read on...

Luke Snayles is a convict, an ex-pilot and a psychopath – but even he wouldn't be taking on a mission like this if they hadn't bent all his fingernails back and threatened to take away his cuddly bunny if he refused.

minute you're in enemy territory. All the 3D action is viewed through the windscreen, though there's a colour-coded radar screen to tell you exactly what kind of objects you're near.

Each moon has exactly 80 ground-based and airborne enemy craft and you've got to take each and every one of them out (some with at least two shots) before you get to cruise on to the next. Not that these Roxizians take this sort of thing lying down. Nope. They fire back.

To make the whole thing even more complicated, there are a whole load of inanimate obstacles all over each planet as well. You can actually take cover behind these, but if you're not careful you could find yourself blasting the hell out of rock instead of an enemy ship.

You'll also find equipment pods containing useful things like cameras and decoys. Drop a camera in any area and you'll be able to look around that bit of the planet even when your tank's somewhere completely different. Cameras also have limited effect lasers so you can shoot enemies by remote control. Plant a decoy and, for a limited period of time, the baddies will start shooting at that instead of you.

Wherever you are you can always access your data banks for info on the moons, cameras, weaponry, locations of equipment pods, map, etc – and on later moons you can pick up converter equipment to toggle between tank and skimmer mode.

Oh yeah – and once you've cleared a planet, you've got to warp through a portal (woo-ee-oo), negotiate a 3D pathway and start the whole thing again on the next one. Except it's harder!

So what's wrong? Well, the Earth is about to be destroyed by the Roxiz who are at this very moment gathering an incredibly powerful stockpile of arms on the ten moons of Saturn. To make matters worse, the Earth has exactly zilch arms left – unless you count one tiny interstellar craft. No prizes for guessing that Luke (alias you, me old son) is the only person stupid enough to take on the seemingly impossible task of singlehandedly saving the universe.

Luckily, you've got one of those gadgets on your craft that enable it to transform itself into a tank the

▲ This is probably the only quiet moment you'll get in this game – so I'd grab a Coke now, if I were you

If you liked Encounter on the 64, Battlezone in the arcades and Backlash on the Amiga, you're in for the time of your life – Voyager combines the best bits of all three and throws in a whole lot more: strategy, lightning quick arcade action, fabulous 3D, hours of absorbing play – you name it, Voyager's got it. And that's not all: out of the goodness of their hearts, Ocean are throwing in a separate cassette soundtrack (a sort of mish-mash of the Pet Shop Boys and Art Of Noise) which has to be one of the most mind-blowing pieces of music I've ever heard for a computer game. If you haven't got the message, it's this: grab hold of Voyager as soon as you can afford it.

▲ What's the function of that innocent-looking radar? And is THAT one of those weapons/energy pods you've been told about?

HINTS AND TIPS

1. Keep moving in tank mode.
2. In skimmer mode, keep flying to a minimum. It uses up less fuel.
3. When you've cleared a moon, find the portal quickly.
4. Avoid open spaces and keep looking for cover.
5. When you reach a new moon, check all your data straight away.

Get ready for a journey beyond sight and sound. Jump into your flying boots (a pair of them Garfield slippers will do), strap yourself into your armchair and get ready to take part in one of the most atmospheric 3D space games you'll ever play. In fact, that's what I like best about this – the feeling that you're really exploring an alien environment, that you can take cover behind inanimate objects and that enemies coming up from behind or above scare you half to death! So what's it really like? Well, just sit back, close your eyes and imagine Encounter with loads more atmosphere and action thrown in. Like the sound of it? Then get yourself a copy of Voyager!

WHAT'S WHAT ON THE RADAR

ROAD BLASTERS™

US Gold, Amiga £19.99

Nuclear war has forced most of the population underground but you – and a bunch of other crazies – are staying above ground with your cars: all you live for is the race to end all races – the Road Blaster Challenge.

So, armed with a bonnet-mounted photon cannon and a drop-ship following above with extra bolt-on weaponry, you've gotta rip up the road (and the other vehicles) through fifty levels of high-tailin' rip-roarin' yee-hahin' chaos! It's that simple.

▲ Not the greatest coin-op in the world – but this is a decent enough conversion

RANDY

I've always been a stickler for this in the arcades, and I have to admit that while this is a rather flawed conversion, lacking speech, sampled music and more detailed sprites, it's actually still very addictive. It may just be the yob in me, but I get real pleasure out of blowing all those cars to kingdom come. There's no way of getting round the fact that Road Blasters could have been better as far as the accuracy of the conversion goes but even as it stands, it's a winner in my book.

MAFF

Road Blasters is one of my favourites in the arcades, so imagine my disappointment when I loaded up what could have been a near perfect conversion, only to find an incredibly easy game lurking behind poor music, average sound effects and basic sprites. The scrolling road is effective, and all the levels have been crammed into one load; I wouldn't have minded putting up with some sort of multiloop, just to get a totally accurate game of Road Blasters on the Amiga. Oh well.

KWON

US Gold, C64 £9.99 cassette, £12.99 disk;
Amiga £14.99

In today's moral climate, it seems that more and more people are living by the rule 'kill or be killed'. Some people are taking the idea to extremes, plunging into danger just to prove that they're really hard and a lot stupider than all the other guys.

Kwon is one such person. Filled with the need to demonstrate the power of his homeland, he decides to travel the world doing battle with all manner of opponents. First off it's away to Russia and to the majestic city of Moscow... to kick seven colours out of the Russians (and this month's Henry Kissinger Award for diplomacy goes to...) starting with the nearest Kremlin guard and then his dog (very friendly - no, I think I'm lying).

After those little Russian confrontations it's off to Amsterdam for a bit of... WHOARR! KNOWORRAMEAN! But Kwon's reputation has spread and one of the... er... young ladies (ahem) tries to knock him stupid. Once you've got rid of her, there's her friend to deal with.

Next comes the holiday atmosphere of Barcelona, where Kwon decides that Miguel the bullfighter isn't doing the best job of beating the horned brute, so he leaps in the ring, smashes Miguel unconscious and then deals with the bull.

Well after a beating a bull, Kwon is well away. Nothing can stand in his path... can it?

The backdrops are quite attractive - detailed and atmospheric - in both versions of HKM; but the sprites are pretty appalling. The animation isn't exactly incredible on the Amiga or the 64 and the blobby animal sprites on the 64 just have to be seen to be believed. Worst of all, there really isn't any gameplay to speak of in either version - the 64's really easy, the Amiga version's annoyingly hard and both are really repetitive with little skill involved. Avoid.

▼ Let's hope future £14.99 releases are better than this (Amiga)

As soon as I saw the naff loading screens, I thought that things were starting to go a bit awry. That's when the game came on - oh dear. The sprites on the Amiga version are large enough, but the animation leaves a lot to be desired. All it amounts to is a few basic moves and actions, none of which are particularly realistic. The 64 version doesn't even have decent sized sprites to fall back on (just some twiglet-like dogs, people and bulls) and if we're talking about playability... there's hardly any! The 64 version is ridiculously easy - so easy in fact, that I finished after just one go - I don't think I'll be returning to it again. This is an incredibly weak program and one of the worst fighting games I've ever seen.

I usually love this kind of game - in fact IK+ is one of my all time favourites - but Human Killing Machine fails to generate any excitement in the old fighting games at all. The similarities to Street Fighter are inescapable - apart from one thing: HKM is actually worse because you get one game instead of two. The graphics are poorly animated, the sound is annoying, the multiloop drawn out and the playability virtually non-existent. In fact, it lacks just about everything that a good game should have, so stick to IK+ until something better comes along. The Amiga price tag is a great idea - I just hope better products will support it in future.

▼ We finished this game on the first go - maybe you'll have worse luck (64)

AMIGA GAMES AT £14.99!!

This is US Gold's first venture into 16-bit games at £14.99. For an experimental period, a selected number of Amiga titles should go on sale over the country for five quid less than you'd normally pay for a full-price game. OK, so this might not be the best title to start off with but with products like Out-run Europa and Last Duel (which would have got a Sizzler if we'd known the lower price) to be sold at exactly the same price, this has to be one of the best moves for Amiga owners in a long time. If only other software houses would follow suit...

ACE 2088

Cascade, C64 £9.95 cassette, £14.95 disk

Generations ago, your ancestor piloted the ACE combat plane to victory on Earth. Now it's your turn – this time, in the vastness of deep space.

Throughout the galaxy, alien opposition has been conquering planets under Federation jurisdiction. Being pretty dis-chuffed at this action, Mission HQ on Earth have ordered you to sort out the enemy invaders. Boarding the mother ship Deliverance, you must hop, skip and jump across the stars, to each of the 118 colonised Federation worlds and, in your Zielger II starfighter, crush the alien threat before it steamrollers its way across the star system to the mother planet.

On board Deliverance, you have at your disposal a host of different information screens to plan your strategy. Whether you wish to check who is on your side and who isn't, or find out the armed strengths of a particular colony, there's a screen here to tell you.

Being the state of the art in fighter design, the Zielger II has an impressive array of offensive and defensive technology. As well as the standard heavy duty front pulse cannon, each of the three Zielger II's on board Deliverance is capable of carrying eight long range missiles, eight rear defence missiles and four fusion bombs, needed to decimate the enemy bases. Tougher shielding and a Rapid Anti-Matter Rechargers can also be fitted, although these are in short supply.

Once armed, you must jettison from Deliverance and begin your assault on the enemy. After negotiating vicious orbital defence fighters, stationed to halt your attack, you must fly down to the planet itself and knock out all of the bases found there.

While this is not exactly a cruise through the park, you will find that rebel forces on the planets (themselves none too pleased over the current state of affairs) will assist you in your task. They'll attempt to destroy enemy bases and even, on some occasions, overthrow the enemy on their own and regain control of their own planet. Whichever way success is achieved, it's back to the mother-ship, to plan your next assault on some unsuspecting alien force.

▲ Captain's Log: Stardate ... er ... oh no – it's Ace 2088, isn't it? (sounds of door being slammed shut behind sacked ZZAP! captions writer)

Although I thought Ace was great for its time, I never thought much of the sequel, and this latest offering, stripped to the bare bones, just seems like more of the same. There are a lot of nice touches to Ace 2088, such as the way the missile target phases into view – and loads of different information screens with some fine animation scattered between them lift the presentation marks. Unfortunately, when you get down to the actual gameplay, there's little more here than an average shoot-em-up.

Apparently this is a space-flight combat simulation. Is it? Nope. Just a fairly average shoot 'em up with bits of uninteresting travel in between. The sound isn't impressive and the 3D graphics aren't exactly overly convincing but that wouldn't matter if the actual gameplay was something to write home about. It's not. Shame really, because the quality presentation's definitely worthy of something really hot – not just an average shmup with ambitions to become a simulator when it grows up.

▲ What this screenshot doesn't tell you: the poor 3D movement and the bland gameplay. Tut tut. Naughty screenshot

Ace 2 in space. That's really all this is. So you can go down on planets and there's me fancy screens to add variety, but they don't hide the fact that Cascade have run short of ideas. I think it's a big joke calling Ace 2088 a simulation (as displayed on the front of the box) 'cos it isn't. Just shoot the baddy, shoot another baddy, then go to another planet where, guess what? That's right, shoot another baddy. Mind you, that's all well and good if you like shooting baddies and aren't too bothered about ineffective 3D. Just don't expect much difference between this and its prequel – apart from a few cosmetic additions, that is.

PRESENTATION 79%

Uncluttered displays, with loads of information – but the manual's a bit skimpy.

GRAPHICS 67%

Smooth, well animated information displays compensate for only average sprites and starfield backdrops.

SOUND 39%

No tunes, and unimpressive spot effects.

HOOKABILITY 68%

Looks as though it could be quite involving at first.

LASTABILITY 52%

Not enough variety to keep you at the screen for ages.

OVERALL 58%

May appeal to fans of the earlier Ace titles. Try before you buy, though.

THE TIPS INDEX FAN CLUB

Dear Lloyd,
I have been reading ZZAP! for nearly two years and this is the first time I have put it down to write, and voice my views. I am one of the old breed of ZZAP!'s readers, and it has given me great pain in seeing the index to all tips, POKES and so forth in Issue 44 (December 88 for those who can't count). The index refers to many issues which are difficult if not impossible to get hold of. May I suggest and I think many will agree:- That you reprint the issues of old so we can buy them OR print all POKES, tips, maps, etc in a separate book and offer it in your sales section.

I wouldn't mind or complain about forking (notice no misprint) out five or ten quid for the chance of obtaining all these lovely POKES (ouch! No not that kind of poke!).

This book would be a useful ASSET, as in the past I have Gulp!? cut out the tips sections and slapped it into a book (cue sound of gun firing though temple and splatting brain all over walls).

Anon, Folkestone

Right now there just isn't the sort of demand for a tips booklet to justify printing it. If we did, we'd have to sell it at a really unreasonable price so nobody would buy it anyway. Still, if enough people express an interest, the big men with cigars and pinstripes who decide the future of ZZAP! might just decide to listen... But then again, they don't listen at the moment (mumble mumble).

BUDGET BONANZA BANANA

Dear Lloyd,
Re the March 'Letter of the Munf', having good full-priced games re-released at budget price is great for people like me with little dosh, but the games concerned are getting newer and newer - just like compilations a couple of years ago.

Eventually, I can see the only full-price games being coin-op conversions or TV/Film tie-ins, and they would soon be stuck on a compilation or rereleased at budget - or both (a la Ghostbusters on Ricochet and Beau Jolly's Chartbusters).

A couple of years back there were rumours of the one pound budget game - 99p for a presumably limited piece of entertainment, but now I can see old budget classics like Thrust and BMX Simulator going this way one day.

What with classics like Tetris being knocked down to three or four quid on release and other full-price games fading into obscurity straight away, I can't see how the smaller software houses producing these titles can compete against Silverbird, Rack-It etc. Putting out games like Bubble Bobble and Sanxion for two and three quid, plus original titles like Slayer and Zamzara.

Still, there are houses like System 3, Palace and Thalamus who put out original, successful games (but they are ALL, without exception, good). Keep taking the tablets.

Leon Cox, Brighton

Personally, I'm quite pleased at how the budget market's going at the mo. Brilliant oldies like Paradroid and Little Computer People are being released at bargain bucket prices and giving younger gamers the chance to play a whole bunch of stuff they'd never have a chance to buy otherwise. Just goes to show that if you've got a 64 and a limited amount of cash, you've now got a wider choice than ever before as to what to spend your money on. Not 'arf bad, if you ask me. On the 99p budget game front, I can't see it happening; but it's surprising how many budget compilations are coming out - witness the Firebird one in The Word this month.

A WILF LETTER

Dear Lloyd,

Out of the ashes of R.A.S.H (Rrap March '89) rises, like the mythological Elephanix, the Welling International Liberators of Fatties - or WILFs for short. We dare any member of the ZZAP! team to insult our newly declared chairman, Gordon Houghton. If 'Cool Dude' Evans (has anyone else noticed the receding hairline?) or that 'scatterbrained, fastidious, madcap kinda gal' Hamza step out line then we will not be held responsible for our actions.

With Gordon in our organisation our membership has risen 100%, bringing the total membership to four. My motives behind this warning are the following:

1. At school I was dogged by the nickname 'Blubberbutt' so I know what it is like to be taunted (wrong spelling?)
2. After the disbandment of R.A.S.H and the obvious ineffectiveness of the Nuneton Tea Cup Liberation Front, we WILFs thought Gordon needed protection.

So what do you say, all you unthin ZZAP! readers? Let's join guts and protect this ZZAP! editor.

Bernie 'Cyril Smith' Manning, founder and other member of W.I.L.F.

AFTERBURNER AFTER MATH

Dear Lloyd,
I have just bought the Commodore 64 version of Afterburner. I loaded the game, plugged in my trusty old joystick and hit the fire button. The game started, I wiggled the joystick round a bit to find that the plane moved in a very unrealistic way. The background graphics were even worse. The game was pathetic. A few days later I played the Speccy 48 version. It was excellent, no blocky graphics, smooth movement and a much more exciting game.

What are Activision 'playing at' if a game can be so good on a Speccy it can be just as good or even better on a 64. Come on Activision, what happened to the good old games like LCP?

N. Davies, Solihull

Yeah well, Little Computer People didn't have 3D in it, did it? I'm no technical genius but one thing I do know is that for all its disadvantages in terms of graphics and scrolling, it's much easier to produce fast and effective 3D on the Speccy than it is on the 64.

But what were you doing buying the game before you'd seen the review anyway? Having fallen for the hype and wasted a tenner myself a couple of times, I've decided to wait for the reviewers' opinion before I buy from now on - I'm sick of making really expensive mistakes.

THE FISH SURVIVAL KIT

Dear Lloyd (alias the man with a paper bag over his head).

I have an important piece of information for fish lovers everywhere! Today (18th February) while playing Pro Ski Simulator, I flicked channels to BBC1, just in time to see a frightening atrocity: Ken D Fish being kidnapped by a Hell's Angel! Has Ken reappeared at ZZAP! Towers? How much is the ransom? Are you going to pay it? Anyway, for all you fish owners at home, here are some Fish Survival techniques, as devised by me, Dr Swinehund.

1. When taking your fish for a walk, be careful to have him on a close lead.
2. Always disguise him/her as an anteater, to avoid detection.
3. Never, ever, feed him cheese, as Hell's Angels home in on this.
4. When bathing your fish, bath with him, and always carry the Doctor Swinehund MK IIVX Harpoon. It doesn't work, but it looks frightening.
5. And the most important rule of all, the one you must never forget, is don't let your fish watch Gremlins. This will kill him/her.

So for the time being, pay the ransom, follow these rules, and kiss your fish every morning before you go to work.

Happy fish loving!
Dr Swinehund, Wiltshire

Everyone will be pleased to know that we rescued Ken from Hell's Angels; but much water has passed under the bridge since then. Ken is rather embarrassed about his last business trip to Grimsby. A minor indiscretion with a lady haddock - Edna - has led to him being suspected of parenting 1500 Kenlets - last seen at a Grimsby football match. Ken would just like it to be made known that he has never been to Grimsby, has no knowledge of anyone called Edna and was tucked up in his castle with a hot piece of gravel on the night in question. Honest.

THAT GADGI WORD STUFF

Dear Lloyd,
Just a quick line to answer the Fat Man's query as to the meaning of the word GADGI: In our neck of the woods GADGI is used in place of words like BLOKE and FELLA.

Hope you will all now be able to use the word GADGI in its correct form.

Paul Walker, Cumbria

... I've done it! In answer to everyone's prayers I've discovered what the word gadgi means. Gadgi is an adjective meaning 'pertaining to a gadge'. Anyone know what a gadge is? ...

Chris Watson, Suffolk

According to PG, the ex-ZZAP! writer, who rang in especially to tell us (and to ask for his teapot back) gadgi means exactly what you said – an old bloke or fella – except we spelt it wrong. He says it should be gadgee. But then what do we know? Any other definitions lurking out there?

LM

SPECCYS ARE RUBBISH – IT'S OFFICIAL

Dear Lloyd,
A few months back you introduced the new reviewer KATI. This is great! In all my life I have never known a girl to be interested in computers! I expect it's brought in some women readers. COME ON YOU WOMEN. READ ZZAP! YOU'LL LOVE IT WHEN YOU DO.

Still at school in the fourth year, I hear many SPECTRUM owners who think the COMMODORE 64/128 are totally st. I totally disagree with them and they say why don't you buy a SPECTRUM instead? I would never degrade. What's your opinion about them? (Totally mad and they all need to go and see a Psychiatrist?) Though soon I'm upgrading to an Amiga.

The Banana King

As far as we're concerned, Speccys are RUBBISH – but then, could we be just a little bit biased? If you compare the cost of a 64 (almost £160) with a +3 (nearly £200 – and for that you get some really rubbish graphics), then there's just no competition whatsoever, is there?

LM

That new gadgi reviews stuff explained (again)

Dear Lloyd,
I would like to comment on the new rating presentation – it's crap!! No, only kidding, but it is a bit weird!! Placing the Amiga percentages next to the CBM 64 percentages is not a good idea. Take the LED Storm review for instance. How come the CBM 64 gets 86% while the Amiga version only gets 80%? The CBM 64 graphics are very blocky compared to the Amiga. You've given sound on the CBM 64 94%, and on the Amiga only 90% – the music on the Amiga version is one of the best tunes I have ever heard on a computer, and then the overall is 94% for CBM 64, but only 92% for Amiga.

I know what you have done, ie: not given marks according to a comparison of the two machines' capabilities. You have instead marked them individually.

But don't you think it's a bit funny when you see 6% higher graphics for the CBM 64 when the Amiga has 100% better graphics??? Maybe you should present them apart – there might be some stupid thick headed commie users thinking, 'HA! LED Storm got better ratings on graphics and sound on the 64 than the Amiga – so much for mega graphics etc, naw naw!!'

Oh, and I used to have a CBM 64, so don't cop me with any CBM 64 bull!!

I reckon the software houses that bring out games at £24.99 for the Amiga must be rolling in it. More often than not, the game is rubbish, and you can tell that not much effort and design time went into making it (ie: ported across from the ST). Would all the CBM 64 owners want to buy Techno Cop for £14.95? I very much doubt it.

Also the reply that I have seen says that prices will come down once Amigas get more popular is rubbish. If you were a company selling games at £24.99 and then your customers doubled would you lower your prices or keep them the same?

Now I know that the £24.99 is only the recommended price, but it's like having £14.95 on the CBM 64 as your top price instead of £9.95. If they were to bring it down to £14.95 instead of £24.99 and budgets about £5-£7 pounds, it would be very interesting to see what would happen.

Julian Smith, Sheffield

To answer your last point first, it's interesting to see that US Gold have now reduced a selected number of new products to the low price of £14.99 – long may it stay that way. Personally, I think anything above £25 is a rip-off, and anything above £20 is only justified by depth and lastability – stuff like Starglider 2 and Carrier Command. It would be nice to see more companies making more Amiga software affordable.

As for the new ratings, we combine the boxes because it's interesting to see just how the different versions compare. But you're right – we judge the games on their own merits, and within their own format. So, for LED Storm, the Amiga version had better graphics than the 64 but not the most amazing graphics for an Amiga. Each game is rated independently within its own format.

LM

ARE CONSOLES CRAP OR CRUCIAL?

Dear Lloyd,

It's a fact that the majority of people who have bought a 16-bit machine, have done so exclusively for the pleasure of playing games. Even so can this justify an asking price of upto £400? I think not.

However, I've got my money safe, for within the next year I'm expecting BIG things. Things which are set to revolutionize home games playing as we know it. For soon everyone could have an arcade machine in their home in the form of a ... console.

Yep, consoles represent the future, but forget the ones currently available and instead look to those due (in any quantity) to our shores shortly. First of which will be the 8-bit PC Engine, a truly potent machine with superb games. As it stands, the PC Engine is quite capable of delivering arcade standard action on its own, however NEC have has the new innovation of producing the CD-ROM add-on, and device capable of boosting 548 MegaBytes of memory, hence dramatic improvements in both graphics and sound.

All this power blessed on only an 8-bit machine! The story doesn't end here though, for thereafter we will see a range of 16-bit consoles set to blow your mind.

So, using the PC Engine as an example, it's obvious to see the power which the 16-bit versions will possess. All that's needed now is a hydraulic cabinet, and Konix have plans for that. The way I see it, there are two options open, either you buy an Amiga and commit suicide when you see the power of the new consoles for half the price, or you wait and buy a console and let someone else commit suicide. The choice is yours.

Dennis Warden, London

Hang on a minute – don't write the Amiga off just like that. The PC Engine does look pretty hot stu' but there's still quite a lot that a console can't do. I'd like to see them producing something as complex as Starglider II, Dungeon Master, a role-playing game or any adventure on the Engine before I write off the 16-bit computers first. What about the price and availability of software for the Engine (about 20 or so titles available and £30 a time)? Just think how many more titles there are available for the 64/Amiga right now!

Sure, the console market is looking good, but for flexibility, variety and choice of games, the 64 and Amiga are still pretty hard to beat.

LM

Regrets – I've had a few. But then again, too few to mention. I did what I had to do – and if you give me half a chance I'll do it next month. Just send all your computerised and other thoughts to LLOYD MANGRAM, ZZAP! RRAP, PO BOX 10, LUDLOW, SHROPSHIRE SY8 1DB. I'll read them my waaaaay.

YAP!

Yaaayyy! Spring! Time to dust down my Bermuda short-ettes and get back in the river for a dirty great slime bath. Sierra/Activision, Amiga £19.99

So - you remember Space Quest, don't you? Course you pace - the final frontier. I'm a big fan of Star Trek, me, so anything to do with space and all that googly stuff gets me really excited.

do. That was the time you, humble 'brain the size of a peanut' interplanetary janitor, managed to save your planet Xenon (now, where have I heard that before?) from certain death by Vohaul's secret Star Generator. Woo!

Vohaul sounds just like my kind of guy, actually. He's slimy, fat, purple (personally, I is a fair bit faster than the original (though the controls are still a bit fiddly now and then) and the parser's adequate. If you can stay alive long enough, there's plenty of puzzles to solve, but once you've died 56 times in the first half hour, does anybody really care?

Unless you're really into the Space Quest theme, take a long look at this before you fork out 20 quid. It may have nice presentation and a glossy box but when you get right down to it, it's just... well, your average lizard's toenail sort of romp. And who wants that, when you can sell a few buckets of snot for an extra fiver and buy a nice, shiny copy of Lucasfilm's Zak McKracken instead?

FAERY TALE ADVENTURE

Microillusions/Mediagenic, C64 £19.99 disk only ou don't have to be a brilliantly intelligent gamesplayer (like me) with thousands of admiring fans (like me), to know that there are some Amiga games which aren't ever going to translate that well to the 64. You know the sort of thing - Starglider 2, Dungeon Master, Carrier Command - and Faery Tale Adventure.

Come off it lads, you don't expect something which started life at about 50 quid and that got everyone shouting out state-of-the-art software left, right and centre, to go down as smoothly as a spot of gnome punch with extra lizard's entrails on the 64. It doesn't.

Anyhow, here's the low-down on the story. Julian, Philip and Kevin are three namby pamby spoilsport brothers who've insisted on ruining the life of a bunch of stinking ghosts, goblins and ghouls. What the brothers are after is a magical talisman and they're prepared to go out into the big bad world of lakes, castles, manors and settlements to get their cowardly custard hands on it.

The adventure is graphically displayed and you pick options, get objects, use magic, etc using either the mouse or a combination of joystick and keyboard.

Sounds OK so far? Yeah, well it would be if it weren't for the pretty basic graphics and the incredibly long and tedious disk-accessing time. Have they heard of data compression at Microillusions? Data compression, my foot! Even when you're just walking around samey ordinary grassland, there's a bit of disk access every 10 or 20 seconds and it takes about one minute of waiting around every time you walk in or out of a building.

Don't know about you, but I'd rather spend an afternoon washing my underpants (I only do that once a year) than waste any time slobbering over a hot jotick waiting for another little bit to load. Especially with graphics as flickery and indistinguishable as this. I mean, if you've got a graphic adventure, you should be able to see a bit more of an object than just a blob.

Apparently, there's an in-depth game behind all this. And if you can be bothered to get any way into it at all you deserve a presentation Chuck Vomit perseverance medal. Oh yeah - and if you've already wasted 20 quid on it - BAD LUCK. Hur, hur.

prefer green) and really, really gross. And he's got a plan. Unless you manage to blitz him in time, Xenon's going to be invaded by thousands of genetically engineered life-insurance salesman synthetically designed to make the life of every single citizen a misery. Oh no!

Oh yeah. And if your skimmer hadn't crashed on the way to the labour camp Vohaul's picked out specially for you, you wouldn't be able to do anything at all about it. Luckily, if you're clever enough, you can make it through the planet Labion, back to Vohaul's asteroid fortress and try to STOP THE PLAN.

Action's presented in typical Sierra style. You wander around the 3D environment using your joystick and typing in commands (to pick up objects and so on) just as in a normal text input adventure.

According to the back of the box, the graphics are in 'incredible 3-D'. Erm... well - we all know what 3-D is like and this isn't it. You can walk behind bushes and trees but they look more like a pile of spinach (yeuch - really hate the stuff) than a shrub. I know you can't have brilliant graphics if you want a decent amount of memory devoted to the gameplay but you don't need to have badly defined blobby sprites instead. You can see from Lucasfilm's Zak McKracken just how much detail you can cram into this type of game it takes just one look at blockland to see Sierra haven't done as much.

Yeah, yeah but what about the game itself? Well, I suppose it's OK if you like dying a lot. As for me, I'd rather spend the afternoon with a couple of tons of billy-goat spare ribs in bar-B-Q sauce than spend an hour of so getting killed every time I find a new location. So what if you can save to disk! Looks to me like they just ran out of ideas for a more interesting storyline.

Personally, I didn't go a bundle on this one but if you liked Space Quest, you'll probably find something to enjoy in it. 3-D and movement thought Infocom games only came out on disk didn't you? Thought you'd never ever get round to playing it on cassette, did ya? Yeah well, you were wrong weren't you. Na na nya na na!

Yup. The first title in the Zork trilogy is now available (in slightly shortened form) on C64 cassette so all you tasty cassette owners out there can experience the wonders of an ancient underground empire and search for the fabulous wonders of Zork. Magic!

Well, nearly anyway. Actually, the whole thing takes about 15 minutes to load in but once you've done that you'll be experiencing one of the greatest ZZAP! sizzling adventures of all time. If you haven't played it yet, and you're not bothered by the loading time, you could do worse than nip down to your nearest software shop and get hold of a copy for £9.99. Still think that's a bit pricey for such an old game – even if it is a classic...

PERUSE THE CLUES

More hot and hairy triplets from a bunch of cuddly, guys. And the winner of the 30 quid software voucher iiiiiisssss – Nizam Ahmed of Middlesex. Fancy a gilet, anyone?

KENTILLA: put the mirror to the cage to defeat the Karush.

SHERLOCK: the opium den is on Slater Street and Basil lives in Camden Street in London.

BARD'S TALE: to make lots of money, first save all the characters. Then delete all but one character and keep on creating more characters. Leave the Guild and give their dosh to the original character and delete them again.

MINDSHADOW: you need the hat and the shell from part one to complete part two (Atha, Atha and Halliwell).

ZZZ: use the bike by pushing it to the house to which the Sandman ran. Fire at bullseye on duck shoot and you're given a balloon. Jump out, fire and exit.

JACK THE RIPPER: tie the bed sheets together, tie to bed, lock door, open window, climb out.

FISH: find a dry route while the cast is cooling.

CORRUPTION: if you're going somewhere you might lose your possessions, put them in your car. There's an interesting conversation to listen to on Teresa's phone at 12.10 (Stephen Bate).

WASTELAND: do not enter every tent. If the whole party is unconscious during a battle, just reboot. Do not visit Las Vegas unless you're very strong. The first place to visit is the rail nomads' camp, then go to Quartz.

ULTIMA V: the cities, keeps and shrines are in the same places as in Ultima IV. Don't steal food but fight for dosh, then buy food in Moonglow. In the chambers of Lord British, there's a magic carpet. Ask the owner of the Arms Of Justice in Yew for the resistance password. In every town, there should be someone who knows the password to the dungeons. You need an item from Empath Abbey to climb the mountains or you won't be able to complete the game.

JINXTER: burn the bread to keep your charm.

DRACULA: to deal with the dog, stand on the table, examine it and throw what you find.

Gloop! Gloop!

RESULTS with Ken the Fish

Hello, fish-lovers everywhere, and welcome to this month's fluid instalment of fish-fancying fun. Some people fancy pigeons; here at ZZAP! Towers it's fish that we find irresistible. And why not? Fish make obedient pets, great lovers and decorative ornaments for the modern home. In their cute little bowls they provide hours of fun for small kiddies and worrisome adults. Cats eat them. Fish mongers sell them. Chip shop owners fry them in batter and serve them in newspaper for approximately £1.10. All scandalous wastes, however, since fish are the finest structural engineers known to vertebrates and invertebrates alike. Who built the Humber Suspension Bridge? The Hoover Dam? The Eiffel Tower? Fish did. The lecture's over – on with this month's results and hotlines.

ZAK MYSTERY FISH CORNER

Exactly my kind of game, this – but I sincerely hope that none of you switched on the lamp with the poor fishy in it... US Gold Flake were offering one of those lar-di-dar aquariums (bowls not good enough, eh?) to the person who correctly identified my mystery fish as a COD. Well – it was easy, wasn't it? As well as an aquarium, the winner received all the necessary subaquatic accoutrements and a copy of Zak McCracken and the Alien Mindbenders. He/she/it was:

Robert Davies, LIVERPOOL L11 5AU.

25 runners-up received a copy of said Sizzler with my anchovine compliments. A large and fleshy fin if you will, for...

John Batten, MIDDLESEX UB10 0NW; Scott Short, NOTTINGHAM NG19 9RD; Tony Reid, WIRRAL L60 6RA; Neil Sherriff, WHIPENADE Beds; Gavin Carr, GLASGOW G69 6ER; Joel Rosenbloom, ILFORD IG5 0ED; Jamie Gill, CRAMLINGTON Northumberland; Scott Downie, WEST LINTON EH46 7BT; Lee Kenning, MANCHESTER M35 9PB; David Megone, BASINGSTOKE RG24 9PJ; Richard Callieu, LONDON W10 5EZ; Gerard Eaton, CO. DOWN BT30 9QZ; Andrew Hurley, HOUNSLOW TW3 3TY; Graeme McKenzie, DUNBAR EH42 1PS; Victoria Lawton, TELFORD Shropshire; Justin Calvert, NEWTON ABBOTT TQ12 1QX; Robert Webb, HIGH WYCOMBE HD11 2UD; Stewart Ayers, CHIPPENHAM SN15 3AG; M Rolston, WALSALL W52 0JD; Joel Long, STEVENAGE S62 8QZ; Paul Brown, STOCKPORT SK6 6QA; Morville O'Driscoll, WORCESTER WR3 7LG; Glyn Scroby, BRIDGEND CF32 8RD; Alan Goodall, ALDERSHOT GU12 4TW; Stephen Bate, WARRINGTON WA1 4JH.

TOTAL ECLIPSE-LOVING FUN

Those tickly-wicklys at Incentive liked the Sizzler we gave their game so much that they offered one lucky Newsfield reader the chance to see a REAL total Eclipse in Finland in 1990. Plenty more fish will pass beneath the bridge by then – but at least it's something to look forward to, eh readers?

Anyway the Mr Manic Mackerel who won was a ZZAP! reader (of course); and his name was, in reverse order:

John Macleod, Ross-Shire IV40 8HE.

And that's it. Go away. I said, GO AWAY. Thank you. Now for the Mystery Fish and the Hotline stuff.

GO ABSOLUTELY BLEEDIN' CRAZY!!

And you all did, unfortunately; we spent several days cleaning up all the saliva and piecing the ornaments back together. By the way, just as a matter of interest, have I ever told you about the craziest Fish ever? No? Well, its name was Mad Angus 'Crazy Bucket' Guppy Trousers III (Jr) and he used to do really zany things like swimming around his bowl the wrong way and sometimes not eating food that was offered to him. Wacky, eh? He died young when his owner 'accidentally' dropped an electric fire in his bowl. And if that doesn't bring a lump to your eye and a tear to your throat, you have no soul.

Back to the present, and Titus were offering a radio controlled car and a copy of Crazy Cars to the person who described the craziest ZZAP! member. He are:

Tom Naughton, Dublin IRELAND.

His winning entry read: The craziest member of the ZZAP! team is KATI Kos All The Imbecile ever does is Komplain An' Talk IncompreHAMZAvely wiv Krazy 'Aieeee!'s, 'Triff!'s, 'Incred's, 'n' such KATistrophic phrases. Well, it tickled our fishy funny bones, anyway. Meanwhile, 20 not-so-witty runners-up received a copy of Crazy Cars. They are, in random access order:

Peter James, TONTEG CF38 1HG; Michael Jones, BIRMINGHAM B32 1NA; Ian Crowther, NORHTUMBERLAND NE61 2AU; Ian Pilborough, SURREY GU18 5XH; Nathan Brown, BRACKNELL RG12 1FX; Lee Kenning, MANCHESTER M35 9PB; Paul Graham, NEWBURY RG14 6BH; Stuart Burns, GLASGOW G67 2DZ; Julian Douglas, ALTRINGHAM WA14 5AU; Sam Hickling, MANCHESTER M20 8GF; Marc Cobelli, BOURNEMOUTH BH7 6RB; Robert Parham, STANFORD-LE-HOPE SS17 8BZ; Van Bouchout Sven, MECHLEN Belgium; Stephen House, READING RG4 0PA; Matthew Elliott, POLEGATE BN26 5LB; Tommy Massen, LONDON E2 6LY; David Jesudason, DUNSTABLE LU6 3EG; Eric Barrett, MARKET HARBOROUGH LE16 7RN; Mark Hopkins, NEATH SA11 3YH; David Abbott, WHITSTABLE CT5 1NU.

Ken's mystery FISH Corner

The typical diet for this Coronation Street fish includes bloodworms, shrimps, caddis larvae and Canadian pondweed; not content with those, he sometimes tucks into a Ramshorn snail or two. Last clue: he's a brightly-coloured member of the Carp family.

So, mealy-mouthed meat-eaters, this is the end. If you want to contact me on the Hotline, ring:

and I'll reveal all those bits of personal fish-like info that you always wanted to know. Top of the list will be the low-down on just exactly what stuff I've got cooking for all you little minnows to enjoy next month. And of course you'll be able to savour all my piscine wit and bubbly sense of sub-aquatic fun. Naturally. Any competition queries give me, Viv Vickress or Caroline Blake a ring; or write to me or Viv at ZZAP! Towers, PO Box 10, Ludlow, Shropshire, SY8 1DB. Toodle-oodleie and glopp-glopp gloop.

The hotline Ken's FishBITZ

As you're feeding your favourite fishy friend, many of you might feel the urge to put on a bit of entertainment as well. Every well-informed piscine intellectual is interested in the computer world's goings on, so you'll be doing your fish a favour if you ring the hotline to find out what games are coming out over the next month.

Not only that, you'll be given highly secret information on this month's hotline comp. What marvellous prizes have I and my human assistants conjured up on our magic mushroom mainframe. Wanna know more? Well, put your fish to bed with a nice fresh fern, make sure he's comfy and ring

"ATTENTION ALL MICRO OWNERS!"

"NOW, YOU DON'T NEED TO BE A COMPUTER
WIZZ-KID, TO MAKE £100s AFTER SCHOOL
ALL YOU NEED IS YOUR MICRO, AND THIS!
READ ON!"

We have all heard of the "computer wizz-kids" who make more money in half term than their dads make in 6 months, but the question is, "How can ANY OWNER of a micro make BIG MONEY, in just a few hours a week?"

"The answer is this book" "MAKE MONEY WITH YOUR MICROCOMPUTER". This is the complete guide to making from home on FULL/PART TIME BASIS. The book is partly devoted to making money, and shows, you DON'T HAVE TO BE A COMPUTER WIZZ-KID, TO MAKE £100s A WEEK, FOR JUST A FEW HOURS WORK, it also shows, HOW TO RUN YOUR BUSINESS "PROFESSIONALLY", AND PROMOTE IT EFFECTIVELY, SO WHEN YOU LEAVE SCHOOL, "YOU CAN HAVE YOUR OWN BUSINESS ALREADY SET UP, AND SOON FIND YOURSELF EARNING IN EXCESS OF £20,000+ A YEAR!

So, if you want all the BENEFITS OF YOUR OWN BUSINESS AND LOTS OF SPARE "CASH" TO BUY THAT NEW COMPUTER, MOUNTAIN BIKE, CAR, MOTOR BIKE, ETC, OR IF YOU JUST WANT TO DO A FEW HOURS WORK AND EARN £50-£100 A WEEK, (JUST THINK WHAT YOU COULD DO WITH £100 A WEEK).

THE BOOK ONLY COSTS £10, WHICH IS A FRACTION OF WHAT YOU WILL MAKE ON YOUR FIRST JOB, SO WHY NOT GO FOR IT EVEN IF IT'S JUST TO SEE WHAT YOU'RE MISSING, AND AFTER ALL, IF YOU'RE NOT 100% HAPPY WITH WHAT WE SEND YOU, SEND THE BOOK BACK IN 14 DAYS, AND WE'LL GIVE YOU YOUR MONEY BACK.

SO IF YOU WANT TO KNOW HOW, YOUR MICRO, THIS BOOK, AND NOT MUCH TIME CAN MAKE "YOU" £100s... SEND NOW!

WALKER'S WAY

Want to learn about life, the universe and everything? Want to win friends and influence people? Well, we can't promise anything, but entry into the CITADEL will help you on your way...

Wednesday 1st February

First job this month is to update the on-screen CITADEL logo—I've been meaning to incorporate a smooth colour fade for some time now. To convert my design from theory into practice a mock-up program was produced which allowed three different colours to be altered on every scanline—a perfect test-bed for design! By the end of the day the in-game logo had emerged in its new form, with six colours fading through it in a classic 'airbrushed' look.

Thursday 2nd February

Now to incorporate the new logo into the game, together with a short routine to produce the same effect as my test-bed. It looks much more solid than the original design, and the fade is really neat (although I say so myself!) The only knock-on effect is that my NMI splits now judder alarmingly when sprites disappear beneath them. Back to the think tank for a modified version of the split routine.

These splits are a major annoyance (Grrr!). Every 8 scanlines the processor gets switched off for 40 cycles to give the hardware time to read in the next row of characters to display, and it's this that causes the timing problems when you're trying to judge changes that ought to be happening off the edge of the screen where on-one can spot them. To add to the confusion, any game that scrolls vertically moves these 40 cycle 'stops' up and down the screen. Then to further complicate matters, any sprites displayed stop the processor in its tracks for another 2 cycles each. Get the picture? Well, the problem was cracked in the end, but it took plenty of brain cells!

Friday 3rd February

MONITOR's main armoury is a 'particle-beam' weapon which hurls out streams of energy globes. After an odd thought (and I do have quite a few!) I hit on a way to quickly detect which type of floor the globe currently occupies to allow the shading and shadow of the globe to change as it passes different colours in the cities. Just a small point but it only took half an hour in total.

The rest of the day was spent back in Sound Effects Editor, producing more new sounds and adjusting priorities to allow some sounds to be more important than others. After all, who wants to hear a wasted enemy missile impacting on a wall if your low energy alarm should be sounding? Answers on a postcard please. (Why does everyone keep saying that?)

Monday 6th February

A bit of reorganisation allowed more moving baddies on screen. Although I allowed for four mobile sprites to be active, originally this included enemy bullets, and when four baddies had emerged from their hangars they simply stopped firing (not particularly menacing, that!) By adding some simple checks to the movement routines there is now provision for four mobiles and two enemy bullets simultaneously (as well as up to ten sprite traps on screen). In total CITADEL is running up to 18 sprites—the absolute top limit is six aliens across any single horizontal strip, since MONITOR and the capture probe always use the two sprites not grabbed by the multiplexor. With total control over all alien movements at once (like for example the 'waves' of aliens in ARMA-LYTE) all 16 created by the multiplexor could be moving, and this will be used in some of the special 'secret rooms', such as storage hangars and laboratories. Wow!

Tuesday 7th February

Today was a major tragedy. Our dog was run over by a van just outside the house after managing to open the front gate by himself. We rushed him to the vet, but he died in Belinda's arms before we got there, and in the circumstances I don't feel much like working for the next few days.

Monday 13th February

Capturing enemy mobiles and controlling them needs a major think, as the joystick mechanics must be practical and foolproof (no disrespect intended to ZZAP! readers!) Two options are open at the moment: different control modes cycled through using the spacebar (OK, as the immediate danger from enemy bullets stops temporarily if you do—these security installations only attack if the player constitutes a threat), or a special sequence of joystick commands and obvious on-screen indication of your actions. Perhaps implementing both would be most useful, but with the option to deactivate the joystick method for those players who prefer using the spacebar (XENON really taxed my patience when it kept insisting that I wanted to fly when it was disaster to do so. Wiggling the stick is sometimes too easy to do by accident!)

Tuesday 14th February

First job of the day—make another backup! Until you've got the sum total of six or more months of work on two or three disks you won't realise just how valuable these become. Apart from making back up copies of them about every week and hiding them in a safe place, programmers can also get quite fanatical about the safety of their working disks (I know I do!) Normally the source files and object code/graphics are kept on a separate disk, and these two travel with me wherever I go in a little black disk box (like a pair of duelling pistols!) Let's face it—it would be bad enough to be burgled, but losing your disks as well... Aaargh!!

Wednesday 15th February

Visited my new accountant – and I really can't think of anything interesting to say about that! (with apologies to any accountants who may be reading this). Something struck me whilst looking round the software shelves later on (and it wasn't a passing ZZAP! reader!) Have you ever thought that looking at the boxes all lined up just isn't half as exciting as reading the reviews in magazines? I know I have! Even peering at the often microscopic screenshots is often no help at all in deciding whether to buy, especially if all inlays show the 16-bit versions (at least they now tend to declare which format is pictured – in the old days you could get a shock when you got home and saw what your version looked like!)

Thursday 16th February

Right. Hands up all those who thought that they would be able to pick whatever weaponry they could find lying about inside the equipment bays of this long dead civilisation without paying anything for it. Sorry! Every item will take energy to grab and bolt on – and the more powerful the weapon, the more energy needed to adapt MONITOR to the new environment.

Today the MINISCREEN was refined to display these energy requirements as well as the type of device captured by the probe. After two quick jabs at the fire button the capture probe will appear. While moving the probe anywhere on screen, any 'grabbable' item will pull the probe in to its exact position when close by, and then the MINISCREEN will indicate the type of item targeted (C=capture/E=energy/F=firepower/S=switch) alternating with the number of energy units required; all items so far need between 1 and 4 units.

The current energy remaining to the player is shown in the form of a bar graph contained in the info pods (positioned at the top of the screen). The complete line-up of info so far (from left to right) is: Score, MONITORs remaining, current city, CITADEL logo, energy bar and current type of firepower. Now, instead of wandering about adding everything you can find, it's more useful to destroy the nearby defences and save the more useful energy pods and extra weapons until really needed.

Some of the weapons have also been improved, and the basic particle-beam weapon made rather weaker (why do I keep mistyping that as bean? – perhaps a vegetarian Freudian slip!) The 'add-on' weaponry now has a life of about 20 seconds continuous use, so when the low firepower alarm sounds you'd better start looking around for a new weapon – there's only two seconds of firing left in the one you've got. This encourages better use of resources and more interaction with the cities, and is also more like real life (yes I know it's only a game but that shouldn't stop some realism!)

Friday 17th February

All those budding 'Rambos' out there will no doubt be pleased to learn that today saw an addition to the destruction of any static guns. Not only does the gun itself explode in a glorious technicolour blast, but now it also leaves behind a large crater! This proves a telling reminder of where you have travelled, and also stops any possible confusion between destroyed guns and the cavernous black exits from the launching bays of mobile aliens.

Ideas have now crystallised for controlling mobiles captured by your probe (just thought you'd like to know that). Oh all right I'll tell you then. There will be three capture modes:

1. MONITOR static. Joystick moves and fires MOBILE unit (ideal for softening up the area ahead and rather like the independent control of the 'Catalite' in WIZ-BALL).

2. MOBILE static. Joystick moves MONITOR and fires MOBILE (by pre-positioning the MOBILE you can protect MONITOR from attack by nearby traps).

3. Joystick moves MONITOR and MOBILE together, and fires MOBILE (by pre-positioning the MOBILE this can provide protection in front, behind or any other position).

This probably sounds far more complex than it will feel in practice. Still, I'd prefer to offer plenty of variety – it's up to you whether you decide to use all the options! Every player will evolve their own preferred style of play – the bottom line is protecting MONITOR from destruction while searching the cities for the main exit, but this open ended approach allows many ways of achieving the same end.

Saturday 18th February

My old friend Chris Payne arrived for a relaxing weekend – I don't think he realised that he'd be tied to the chair until I'd finished writing down all his comments and feedback about CITADEL! The most useful thing was watching a beginner play for the first time after only a brief description and demo by an expert player (me, you fools!) Once he got the hang of the capture probe the MINISCREEN display on MONITOR really helped in finding out what was what. The 'Glide and Fire' mode took a bit more getting used to, but once mastered does mean that you can dodge backwards and forwards whilst firing in a different direction. Practice makes perfect!

Overall response was very favourable, and first comment was 'This is great – and it feels really different' to play from other shoot 'em ups' (which is what I wanted!) Specific thoughts concerned possible changes to the sprites. The energy pod got confused with the static guns, and MONITOR's subtle engines which animate in each direction of travel weren't noticed for some time in the heat of the action (Repeat after me: I must be bolder with my pixels!) Another helpful suggestion was the addition of a demo mode which shows gameplay in a 'feature by feature' way. After all, how else will a beginner even guess at the variety of ways to explore and play?

Monday 20th February

Start of the 'mods'. A new design of energy pod is now needed, but luckily the old one (which got confused with a static gun) can still be used after modification and different animation (as what else – a static gun!) MONITOR's engines were enhanced to boldly go where no engine had gone before, and a more stylised empty 'socket' produced to replace the original design (which remains in an equipment bay after a weapon or energy pod is collected).

A selection of small improvements were also made to the code as a result of my special guest's comments – the capture probe now grabs a bit more fiercely, and crashing into enemy units now drains more of your shield energy. After all, this isn't supposed to be dodgems!

Tuesday 21st February

I don't believe this! After sitting down this morning a whole host of alien designs for new floor tiles appeared within half an hour which look like Aztec mosaics (well at least I think so!) The screen designer (me!) is still suffering from shock – he normally likes to be warmed up thoroughly and have several cups of coffee before ideas commence. Still, if ideas want to come out when I'm not expecting them who's complaining? Not me!

After this great start to the day nothing seemed to be able to go wrong, and a neat design popped up in the sprite processor for a switch which will operate some of the secret doors – it looks like two contacts banging together (Oo-err!) All doors will blend in with the surroundings perfectly (looking just like another section of wall), but once a switch has been found and operated the affected area will shimmer for some seconds allowing you to pass through it. Effectively the cities will be formed from sealed chambers, each with its own secret entrance and exit. What better way to discourage intruders from exploring?

Wednesday 22nd February

Another good suggestion for a subtle tweak gameplay has been the ability to change your mind after starting a move to an adjacent floor tile. In chess you can change your mind after moving a piece as long as you keep your hand on it (once you let go, that's it!) At the moment any move in CITADEL continues until the destination tile is reached. The next mod will allow free movement, but only allow stops in the middle of each tile. This way you can dart about, foxing the security installations who will always target their calculated destination, giving you more of a chance to dodge back out of the way. Sounds a bit complex, but I'm sure you'll notice the difference in practice!

Thursday 23rd February

The next few weeks will see the doors leaping into action (or should that be shimmering?), and the long awaited (by me at any rate) ability of MONITOR to use lift shafts to sink into the city floors and emerge on the other parallel side of a city. This will really expand the gameplay and allow frenzied bursts of action in my 'level' editor to produce three dimensional mazes. Effectively all the basic elements will then be finished and levels can be completed by getting to the main exit (this may sound easy but there will be plenty of wheeling and dealing needed to even get as far as the second city!)

Next month will also see the return of the music editor and the start of the CITADEL soundtrack. I'm hoping to fit in an in-game soundtrack option (wish me luck). Never will I forget the feeling it gave to DELTA! (Cue sunset and roll the final credits till next time).

HOLY RUDEWORDS! IT'S ME TIPS!

Super heroes abound this month, with the solution to A Fete Worse Than Death – the Joker part of Batman – along with maps to both sections. Holy halibut! That's good stuff, innit? And that's not all! We've also got ... er ... some other stuff. Not too sure at the minute, 'cos I haven't sorted them out. I'm just about to, though. A few tricks with a word processor and a staple gun and you won't know what's hit you! On second thoughts I think I'll just stick to the tips. So it's time to get all dolled up in me cape and ... TO THE BAT POSTSACK! Waaaa! (thud) HOLY HAIRNET Who left that football there! (Rubbish reviewer wearing bedraggled Batman costume hobbles off to desk).

DEFLEKTOR (Gremlin)

Unfortunately, this tip only works for those people using an Expert cartridge (all together now, 'Aaaaawwwww!'). Load the game up with the cartridge (using Expert-Boot), RUN it and wait until the title screen appears – now, instead of pressing 5 plug a joystick into port one. By pushing up on the joystick, you can move forward through the levels; to go back push the stick left. Erwin Van Immerseel (who sent this tip in) also says that sometimes you can move the end generator and walls around as well. Good stuff. Thanks Erwin!

TURBO BOAT SIMULATOR (Silverbird)

Warren Pilkington must like budget games, as he sent in these POKES. Load up the game and reset the 64. Now type the following to affect the game ...

POKE 27937,173 (RETURN) for infinite lives
POKE 29955,173 (RETURN) for infinite power
POKE 27730,1 (RETURN)
POKE 27983,1 (RETURN) to get just one object to finish level

Press RESTORE or type SYS 27650 (RETURN) to restart.

HUNTER'S MOON (Thalamus)

This isn't quite the listing that we had in last time. This time it's for invincibility, so that you can plough through hordes of alien thingies. Whoar! Cor! Yay! and other expressions of enthrallment. Who sent it in? Oh, it was George Allan and George Paterson. Type it in, SAVE it for future use, then RUN it. The program should then load with incy-vincy-bility.

PRO SKATEBOARD SIMULATOR (Code Masters)

Not that bad a game this. Jon Barry from Walsall thinks it's alright, so he's come up with this reset POKE. Reset the machine using one of them 'unstoppable' cartridge thingies then type the following.

POKE 3701,96 for infinite time
POKE 56576,103:SYS 28416 to restart.

MASTERBLASTER (Zeppelin)

This is an absolutely awful game! Fancy doing that to such a good song title (by Front 242, I must add You don't have to, Maff - Ed). Warren Pilkington from Manchester thinks it's rubbish as well; I know 'cos he told me in his letter. Still here's a little bit of interesting stuff: if you reset the machine at the loading screen, then type SYS 20480 (RETURN) you can hear the loading tune to your heart's content. Aaaaand...

If you load the game and reset the computer, then type SYS 5200 (RETURN) you can see a 'good end sequence' as Warren puts it. Er, if you say so Waz!

PACMANIA (Grandslam)

Waaay! Yahaaahooo! This is it! The first listing of the month! Hooray! Oh, alright then, maybe not. Well it is a listing and it's for Pacmania and it's from Gareth Edmondson from West Glamorgan. It makes the game ... oooooh, just a bit easier. Try it for yourself. Just type it in, SAVE and RUN it ... with your Pacmania tape in the player ready to load, of course.

SAMURAI WARRIOR (Firebird)

Remember waaaay back in Issue 39, there was a couple of reset pokes to give more energy on this ace fumpin' game? But it didn't give infinite energy, did it? Well R Motler has sent in this cheat to make sure that your energy level doesn't go below four bars. Just type HHDSFHHH on the score table: the border should flash and a figure 8 should appear. This signifies that the cheat is operational. If you want to turn the cheat off, just type HHDSFHHH on the score table again. Be warned, however. This cheat doesn't affect Karma.

DRAGON NINJA (Ocean)

The amount of people who sent this in is more than ... six. Probably 'cos it's quite obvious really. When you die on the fourth level and it says 'Rewind tape', DON'T! Just leave the tape going and the next set of levels will load, giving you access to the later bit with five lives and full time. Makes things a bit easier. Thanks to those who bravely struggled to find that out but never got their name mentioned.

THUNDERBLADE (US Gold)

If you 64 Thunderblade fans keep getting a missile up your tailpipe, then try this little reset poke from Roy, Stu, and Tel-Son. Load the game, reset the machine and enter the following and type SYS 4096 to restart with more helicopter backup.

POKE 4159, number of lives (3-255) RETURN

SPITTING IMAGE (Domark)

It's the man with the glasses again! You know, Joe 90. What do you mean you don't remember? Swivelly chair and that round cage thing! You know! Oh, suit yourself then. Here's the 64 tips anyway ...
Load up and reset the game and enter POKE 3314,173 (RETURN) for player one infinite lives and POKE 3348,173 (RETURN) for infinite lives for player two. Aaaaand the magic number for all the restartin' stuff is SYS 2816 (RETURN). Cheers, four-eyes (only joking!).

ELITE (Firebird)

A little bit to follow up on Andrew McGarrigle's Amiga stuff. If you don't remember, it's type SARA instead of the password at the beginning, then type the real password. This starts up the cheat. Now to enter the cheat screen press the asterisk in the numeric keypad. Simon Liu has sent in this useful tip. Changing the value of byte 97 (in hex) changes your rating, from 00 (harmless) to 08 (Elite). Wow! Well 'ard!

LAS VEGAS CASINO (Zeppelin)

No longer much of a gamble on the roulette any more, thanks to G Towers in Warrington. Just bet the lot on black seven, then the lot on black nine. You should now win £50,000 and see a picture of a car. How exciting!

CARRIER COMMAND (Rainbird)

Well this took while to appear didn't it? Or maybe I'm just behind. This was sent in by an anonymous tipster who says do this ...

Pause the game from the main viewing screen and type THE BEST IS YET TO BE complete with all the spaces. The game should start automatically. Now pause the game and press + or - to toggle manta invincibility. Then it gets a bit vague, as he (or she, as I don't know who it is) says 'Try other numbers on the keypad when paused. You might get refuelled or something.' Very precise. Still, it seems to work!

EMPIRE STRIKES BACK (Domark)

Yes, you CAN believe your eyes, it IS another tip for Empire. Seem to be getting a bit of a regular thing, don't they? Still, on with the biz for the 64 version cheat...

According to David Robertson, if you press and hold SPACE BAR, B, N, M, J, K, and L, you get infinite shield energy. Good, eh? No need to turn to the dark side now, is there?

ROCKFORD (M.A.D)

Not a great game, but it was cheap, so some people are bound to have bought it. Henrik Moerk Matzen from Denmark has sent in some pokey things, so here we go...

Load the game and reset the 64 (the usual process as Henrik so rightly points out) then type the following...

POKE 58199,165 (RETURN) POKE 61881,165 (RETURN) for infinite lives
POKE 61875,76:POKE 61876,187:POKE 61877,241 (RETURN) to get rid of sprite to sprite collision detection

POKE 63890,165 (RETURN) to be free (erm...)

POKE 64017,169:POKE 64018,0 (RETURN) so that you only have to pick up one diamond

SYS 51992 (RETURN) restarts the game.

SWORD OF SODAN (Discovery Software)

Don't remember seeing this one wend its way into the office (moan, moan, grumble). Anyhow, I've got this tip from D Jones in Welwyn Garden City. Play the game once so that you get on the score table and enter any name you want. Start the game again so that your player is on the screen and type DISCOVERYSOFTWARE (no space). Now if you press return you will go onto the next level with infinite lives. If you want to get onto even higher levels then simply press return and BINGO! There you are!

ARKANOID II – REVENGE OF DOH (Imagine)

Well yeah, so what if we've had a listing in for this before? That one was for the lives and stuff. This one's better, oh yes sirreeee! It gives you infinite lives and allows you to advance levels by pressing the RESTORE key. Whoar! This was sent in by... er... oh. They haven't put their name on the letter. Anyway whoever it is they come from Wrexham, which isn't that far from where I used to live. Now, it's a bit long, so make sure your fingers are well oiled...

BULLDOG (Gremlin)

This little one was sent in by Lawson Davies from Pencoed, South Wales. He says that if you type 'c' on the score table (including apostrophes, otherwise it just won't work) you will be blessed with infinite ships. Thanks Laws, me auld mate (no, I've never met him).

R-TYPE (Electric Dreams)

Resetty-setty pokeys for thissy... no, it's no good. I can't keep this up any longer. Just load R-Type, reset the game on the title screen and type these pokes...

POKE 12865,173 (RETURN)
POKE 12957,173 (RETURN) for infinite lives

POKE 12700,96 (RETURN) to disable collision

SYS 32768 (RETURN) to restart.

By the way, if you haven't got a reset switch, watch out for some non-reset POKES coming your way real soon!

MENACE (Psychapse)

Joe 90 has been getting his glasses in fettle and produced these POKES. Load up the game, reset it on the title page and enter the following.

POKE 8980,234 (RETURN)

POKE 8981,234 (RETURN) for infinite energy

POKE 8228,0 (RETURN) for infinite cannon

POKE 8243,0 (RETURN)

POKE 8261,0 (RETURN) for infinite lasers

SYS 2080 (RETURN) restarts.

RAMBO III (Ocean)

A small tippette for the Amiga version of this 'hard man' game. Just type RENEGADE on the score table then press 1,2 or 3 on the title screen to access any of the three levels. Thanks to ABC in Bridgend for that one.

FIREBIRD SAMPLE PLAYER

Pure self indulgence, this one. I like it so I've put it in. It's from the man with the budget POKES himself, Jon Barry and it enables you to play samples in any sequence you want from DATA statements – useful for demo designers everywhere. Now it's a bit complex, so listen carefully...

First load up the game you want (Slimey's Mine, I, Ball or Arcade Classics) type in and SAVE the following listing, then RUN it.

1 REM FIREBIRD SAMPLE REPLAY
2 REM BY JON BARRY
3 :
5 FOR T=4096 TO 4145:READ A:POKE T,A:NEXT
6 POKE 56,16:NEW

60 DATA 197,253,208,219,169,55
70 DATA 133,1,88,96
```

Done that? Now, type in the next listing and SAVE it.

1 REM ZZAPI BEATBOX
2 REM BY JON BARRY
3 :
10 RESTORE
20 READ L,H,D:IF L<0 THEN 10
30 POKE 251,0:POKE 252,L
40 POKE 253,H:POKE 254,D
50 SYS 4096
60 GET A$:IF A$="" THEN 20
100 DATA ..... -1,0,0

BACK TO REALITY (Mastertronic)

Not simply another batch of infinite lives POKES these. Oh, no. Something far more interesting has made its way into the office from Grant Robson in Renfrewshire. Load up the game, reset the machine and enter some of the following for some diverse effects.

POKE 53271,3 (RETURN) POKE 53277,3 (RETURN) to make your character larger than everything else
POKE 53271,252 (RETURN) POKE 53277,252 (RETURN) to make all the other sprites larger and leave your character the same size
POKE 53271,255 (RETURN) POKE 53277,255 (RETURN) to increase the size of everything (if you know what I mean – nudge, nudge)
POKE 53271,0 (RETURN) POKE 53277,255 (RETURN) to play BACK TO HOUGHTON (Ha ha, how mildly amusing Grant)
POKE 53271,255 (RETURN) POKE 53277,0 (RETURN) to play ADVENTURES OF A DRAINPIPE (Hoo-hoo! No Grant, please or I'll crack a rib!)
POKE 24752,x (RETURN) to change the colour of your character's top, where x is replaced by 0-15
POKE 24753,x (RETURN) to change the colour of your character's trousers
POKE 30916,234 (RETURN) POKE 30917,169 (RETURN) POKE 30918,0 (RETURN) to turn the music off.
And after all that, type SYS 16384 to restart.

Now the last DATA statement isn't the one to use. This is where you put the data for the samples you want to play and this is the structure...

L,H (from the following sample tables), speed of sample (1 fastest, 255 slowest, 20 normal)

If you want the sequence to carry on ad infinitum, then put the -1,0,0 at the end of the data.

Well, now that you've got the listings, I suppose that you want some data to put into them. Well, here are a few table fingies for just that purpose.

SLIMEY'S MINE

ARCADE CLASSICS

We also have tables for the sounds in Microrhythm+, so if you want to have them just drop me a line. If there are enough requests I'll stick 'em in the mag. On the other hand, if you're not too much of a whizz with data stuff, here's a little demo that Jon sent in for Slimey's Mine. Just add these statements to the end of the Beatbox program –

```
100 DATA 141,144,20,166,170,10
110 DATA 178,,179,15,178,179,17
120 DATA 178,179,19,178,186,21
130 DATA 141,144,45,233,245,6,-1,0,0

ATTACK OF THE MUTANT CAMELS (Llamasoft)

Well, well, well. What have we here. Some more shape changing POKES from the amorphous one himself, Grant Robson. This time for the hairy Minter's classic (pah) game. To expand stuff, look up the numbers of the bits you want to increase and add them together, then put them in POKE following the list.

- 1 – Your ship
- 2 – Your laser fire
- 4 – Camel's laser fire
- 8 – Top left of camel
- 16 – Top right of camel
- 32 – Bottom left of camel
- 64 – Bottom right of camel and the POKE is POKE 5148,x (RETURN)

So if you wanted to expand bits 1, 8, and 32, you would add them to get 41 and enter POKE 5148,41 (RETURN), dead easy, eh?

ARMALYTE (Thalamus)

Now this listing isn't for the casual POKES typist. It's a seerious listing, knowworramean! As well as giving infinite lives for both players it allows you to select any level – including the end sequence! The amazing techno-boffin responsible for this is Anton Von Deurzen, also known as the Angel of Death (yeah, I'm sure). Off yer go...

```

Time for another couple of POKES! (I do apologise) from Roy, Stu and Tel-Son. This time it's for the first part of Ocean's Vindicator. Load it up, reset it and enter these...

POKE 34644, number of lives (3-128) (RETURN)
SYS 34480 (RETURN) plonks you back into the game. That's it. Painless enough eh?

LAND OF NEVERWHERE (Power House)

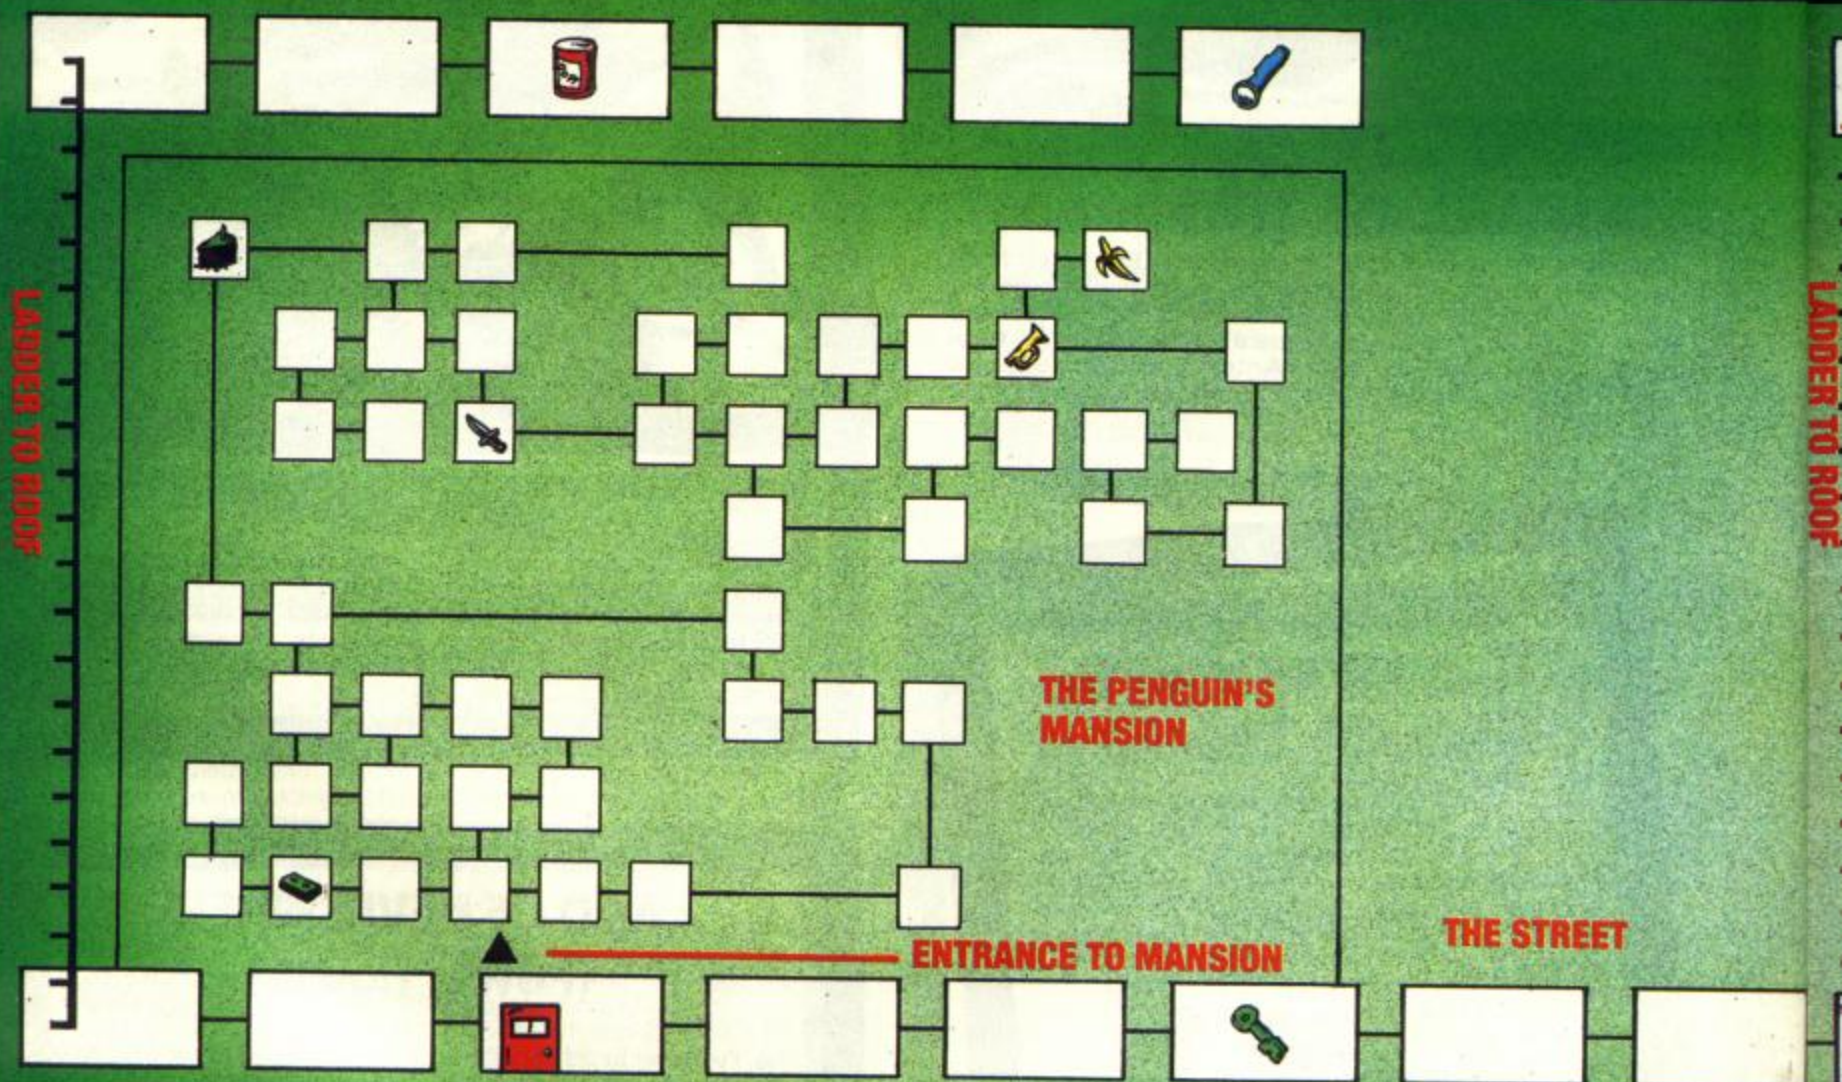

No, I've never heard of it either. Still, Stuart King from Blackpool has and he sent in this POKE. Load up the game, reset the 64 and type POKE 35587,234 (RETURN) to disable sprite to sprite collision detection. When you're ready to rock, type SYS 30000 (RETURN) to restart, or SYS 30250 (RETURN) if you want to just listen to the music. When you're ready, press RESTORE to start the game.

BATMAN

A FETE WORSE THAN DEATH

BATMAN, PART 2 – THE JOKER (OCEAN)

Chris Pratt (sounds a bit like bat. OK, so it doesn't) from Morpeth, Northumberland has sent in the solution to the Joker adventure. So masks on, heads down and yer off!

First of all, find the LIGHTBULB in the Batcave and use it in the dark room. This will illuminate the GAS MASK and the FLASH LIGHT. Go out of the batcave and use the GAS MASK before going into the sewers as this will stop your energy level hurtling down. Use the FLASH LIGHT in the dark sections of the sewers to see where you're going. Next find the FALSE TEETH, which enable you to eat food. Find the SHADES and keep them for future use. Pick up and use the EARS for a few extra points.

When you reach the fairground, search the tents for the money and use it in the fruit machine room. Keep trying to win until a JOKER CARD appears. Collect it then go to the hall of mirrors where you will find the CAMERA. Pick it up and use it for extra percentage, then find the impassable door in the hall of mirrors and use the JOKER CARD. This allows access to the Joker Joint. Go all the way down the ladder back into the sewers.

Use the WIRE CUTTERS to defuse the explosives on the way. When all ten have been taken care of, go back to the fairground where the Joker will be walking around. Back him into a wall and keep high-kicking him in the face. He will then drop a ROPE. Pick it up then make for the rollercoaster. One of the poles of the rollercoaster is actually a disguised ladder. Climb up and get the HAMMER AND NAILS. Climb up another ladder and get the DAGGER. On the next screen you will find Robin, so use the ROPE to free him. Oh, and if you use the HAMMER AND NAILS to stop the doors from moving, you will get extra percentage.

▲ The first level: you don't notice the jerky scrolling when you're getting tubbed by the nasties

LAST DUEL

Capcom/US Gold, C64 £9.99 cassette, £14.99 disk

Oh, dear. Another war. Far away, in another galaxy, in another time, two races are locked in combat. On the planet Bacula the Galden tribe, having overthrown the government and seized power over the whole world, want more.

Their chosen target is the small, peaceful planet of Mu. The Mu-ans (for it is they), start to get a bit worried at hearing the news, and immediately leap into action.

Dusting down their ancient laboratories, they install their best scientists to come up with an effective deterrent to the alien threat. After many long months working around the clock, they finally came up with a solution.

And this is some solution: a vehicle of immense firepower, with the ability to leap into the air to avoid ground hazards. More amazingly, it can also transform itself into an airborne vessel specially designed to eliminate any kind of enemy in the sky.

Armed to the teeth with such an awesome piece of hardware, what better place to try it out than in the heat of a bloody good battle? And what luck! The Galdens have decided that today is the day of the attack!

Off you go then, blasting your way through progressively more difficult levels, alternating between ground vehicle and fighter plane every other stage. By the way – watch out for the holes in the ground. Fall through one and, fancy machine or no fancy machine, you've had it, mate.

Just casually scattered about the place, you'll find power-up pods, which you must shoot to release extra weaponry and increase your firepower. And boy, will you need it when you get to the biggy end of level nasty. Just think of the horriblest, slimiest, ugliest monster you can possibly imagine – this one's even worse (well it seem like it when you're face to face, anyway).

OK, let's cut the crap! Just get fuelled up, kiss mom goodbye and go kick some ass! This could well be your last duel, you know. (Clever, eh?).

Is this another earth-shattering addition to your already bulging collection of shoot 'em ups? Nope. The action just plods along, and there isn't always all that much of it. Every now and then there are huge gaps without any enemies – which is when you start to look at the blocky graphics and notice the unimaginative in-game sound. Still, the title tune's not bad, the backdrops are pretty colourful and as long as you're not too fussy about fancy frills or presentation, you could get a fair bit of fun out of this. Just don't expect too much.

If you're such a snoot that you refuse to enjoy a shoot 'em up that hasn't got state of the art animation and ultra smooth scrolling, you won't enjoy Last Duel – it hasn't got any of them. What it has got is some fairly eyebrow-singeing gameplay which doesn't look too great but has enough action to keep you hooked. There isn't much in-game sound to speak of either, but the blasting is fast, tough and a lot of fun. Maybe I'm just perverse, but I really enjoyed it; in other words, it's nothing really special but definitely worth trying out.

OK, so there's nothing outstanding about Last Duel but it is a pretty fast, tough-action shoot 'em up that's a lot of fun to play for a while. The animation and scrolling aren't all that hot (you can't really tell the difference between the car and the plane) but the backgrounds are colourful and the gameplay's all there – and that's what counts, isn't it? If you're a bit of a shoot 'em up snob, this might not be quite up to your standards; as for everyone else, try it and see what you think. You never know, you might forget all about the graphics and actually end up enjoying yourself!

SILKWORM

Random Access/Sales Curve, C64 £9.95 cassette, £14.95 disk; Amiga £19.95

● Dakka dakka! KER-boom! Nyyyyyowww! and other such noises are yours when you play Silkworm

You know how it is. A few bevvies in the bar whilst you're watching the news and a report comes on...

TERRORIST ACTION ALL OVER THE CONTINENT IS INCREASING! THE ARMY NEEDS HARD TROOPS!

So you stagger out of the pub and sign up – after all you've got that Army Surplus helicopter that you tarted up. It's only two weeks later (when you get the call-up papers) that you realise what you've done.

'Don't worry,' says your mate, 'I'll bring me jeep'

This hardly fills you with confidence, until you see that his jeep isn't just a little Suzuki 4x4, but an armoured vehicle with cannons and a missile launcher.

'Fair enough,' you think – and off you go.

First of all, the action takes place in the mountains, where small helicopters and ground based missile launchers attempt to blow you out of the sky. No problem – you and your mate just blow them away, picking up the energy emitted by the exploded mines to use as shielding, or shooting it to cause a smart-bomb effect.

However, when some bits of helicopter drift in and form a large ABC Warriors type gunship, the

▼ Any minute now, it's going to be hot toes and burnt earlobes for you, matey (Amiga)

I first saw the demo versions of Silkworm just after Christmas and was impressed by how much of the arcade feel the programmers had managed to cram into the 64 and Amiga. Now the finished game is here, I can say that they've done the best conversion job possible. The graphics, especially on the Amiga, are really atmospheric and the sound effects (on both versions) are pretty hot as well – on the 64 you also get a great Ben Daglish soundtrack! What impresses me even more is that they've bothered to program in an extra alien especially for the Amiga – which means you get the equivalent of the arcade game and even more. This is one shoot 'em up you can't afford to miss.

▼ The Third Level sports some gorgeously coloured backdrops – but you won't have much time to stand and stare (64)

ASSAULT HELICOPTER

- < Used for air-attack on enemy emplacements
- < Fires air to air/air to ground missiles
- < Capable of double front-missile mode and extra manoeuvrability from collected pods
- < Can be shielded by mine emissions
- < Best control – joystick

Silkworm is one of those arcade games where you see it and think, 'oh, it's just a shooting helicopter game', but you soon get gripped by the frenzied blasting action and atmospheric graphics. I actually had no idea that the game was to be converted until I saw the demo version, so it came as a very nice surprise. The programmers have done a remarkable job on the home versions graphics, coaxing the utmost out of both machines to portray the action to the best effect. In fact, I'd say that some of the graphic effects on the Amiga are better than the coin-op! I haven't quite managed to finish the game properly, but I'm determined... so if you'll excuse me, I'm off for another thrash.

Silkworm isn't exactly the world's greatest coin-op ever but it is an absolutely brilliant conversion! The 64 backdrops are really pretty (the sprites aren't so exciting, though) and the Amiga graphics are practically as good as the original. But what really makes this so much fun is the all-action, fast and furious gameplay - especially as it's just as exciting to play on your own as with a friend. In fact, even if you're on your own, you get double the fun because once you've finished playing with the chopper, you can start all over again with the jeep! Unless you're into misery and deprivation, check this out.

◀ If you think you can stand the pace, sign here - but make sure you've got a friend who can drive a jeep, 'cos otherwise you won't last long... (Amiga)

▲ The end of Level Two: you won't destroy that tank by firing from up there, you know (64)

ATTACK JEEP

- < Used for ground attack on enemy installations
- < Fires ground to air missiles via movable turret and has a front-mounted cannon
- < Capable of twin ground to air missiles in 'spread' formation
- < Has the ability to jump which can be increased with pick-up pods
- < Can be shielded by mine emissions but can't collide with mines
- < Best control - keyboard tension mounts. A few well-placed blasts soon destroy it and a pod appears. You pick it up and find an extra barrel auto-mounted on your front cannon.

Just as you near the end of the canyon and think that safety is close at hand, the enemy rain on your parade by flying in a gigantic gunship that has to be blasted a good number of times before it explodes.

Next it's to the plains and other terrains. Oh, and if you thought that the big helicopter was bad, wait until you see the huge tanks and missile launchers, all of which have to be encountered before entering the metallic enemy complex!

Whimpers from terrified pilot.

THE DEEP

US Gold, C64 £9.99 cassette £14.99 disk

Oh, no. Not another military takeover bid. Honestly, there's more coups (geddit?) round here than at a pigeon-fancier's club (mind you, who's going to admit to fancying pigeons? Erm, sorry). Strange thing is, they've decided to attack by boat this time. Must be getting a bit boring, running up and down beaches all the time, and the sand gets everywhere, in your socks, down your shirts, in your under-pants...

Quick! Someone get me a sick bag! And no, it's not because of the startling realism of being in charge of a heavily armoured hydrofoil ship, battling against the might of an entire military waterborne assault party, intent on cutting short your little cruise on the high seas. No! It's because The Deep is awful! No corner has been cut, no stone left unturned, in the quest to produce one of the tackiest shoot 'em ups ever. The graphics range from mediocre to defying-definition. From playing the game to writing the review, I've been wondering how - just how can a big, purple pancake blow up a ship? Well, that's exactly what one of the sprites looks like. And while this is going on, all you can hear is a pathetic explosion. Life on the ocean waves, eh? I'd rather shiver me timbers.

▲ With a bit more polish, better graphics and a little more variety, this could have been pretty good...

Mind you, we're not exactly overflowing with water-based defense craft around these parts. As a matter of fact, we've only got one boat, and that's only got depth-charges for weaponry. Still, I suppose we'll have to make the best of a bad situation, eh?

Worried yet? You soon will be. The Deep has you alone, in the middle of the ocean, battling against innumerable odds, with an old boat for transport and a supply of depth-charges for protection.

The game takes place over four stages. The first section has you collecting tokens from the seabed, whilst warding off the submerging sea-devils with your depth-charges, while the next two levels consist of blowing up large, underwater vessels. Stage four is a bonus stage, where you have to assist in the evacuation of refugees via a Missile Command type of game.

Completion of all four levels moves you back to a more difficult first level, where you can blow up more and more baddies. What more could a buttermilk want? (eh?)

Deary me... oh, sorry, you want me to say something more? Well, actually, there's not much more I can say. Except perhaps that the graphics are not very good, the sound is non-existent (apart from a rubbishy depth-charge explosion effect) and the game is ridiculously easy except at the times when you can't see where you're going because the screen is too dazzling. I wonder what made them decide to convert this? I don't know. But The Deep still isn't that good.

US Gold, C64 £9.99 cassette, £14.99 disk

Guess what? It's Chicago and you're in the 30s. Life's just rolling along as usual: machine guns in violin cases, speakeasies, prohibition, ragtime - you know the stuff.

Meanwhile, Al Capone's been a naughty boy. The government slaps a ban on alcohol, and what happens? He opens a chain of nightclubs and sells the stuff on the black market at ridiculous prices. Of course the punters buy it, making Capone a rich man.

You play a streetwise under-cover cop (you know, black hat, raincoat - the works). On the basis of information it's taken you months to collate, you've braved every possible danger and have finally managed to infiltrate uncle Capone's mob.

You're in there, so now what? Obvious really - you just deal out justice in the only way these thugs know how. In other words you depend on your wit, charm, manners - and a loaded machine gun.

▼ 'OK, wise goys, listen up - dis game's great on da Speccy but not so good on da 64. Got it?'

I really like that Elliot Ness gadgi, so I was well chuffed when Chicago 30's dropped through the old letterbox. When I loaded it up, however, I wished it would pop right out again. The gameplay's a lot like Robocop but that's just about where the resemblance ends. The whole procedure is ridiculously hard from the word go - primarily because bullets appear from absolutely nowhere to knock you off before you start. Looks as though I'll have to wait for the official Untouchables conversion for a good gangster smash on the 64.

It's mostly footwork. On the other hand, being one of the city's finest, you also have access to a smart, unmarked police car, but only for short periods of time (smart, unmarked police cars tend kery sprites with about three frames of animation, totally unrealistic sound effects, and an awful ragtime tune droning on and on and on is just about the sum of it. That coupled with the most basic of shooting games, makes Chicago 30's a title that I wouldn't mind sending for a swim with concrete shoes on. But then I'm well hard, me.

Well I'm not sure about the setting, but it feels like the program is about 50 years old! Flic-

It gets worse doesn't it? I mean, you go down the pub for a few bevvies and you get psychopath skinheads accosting you saying things like 'I saw you bad mouth-ing me' when you weren't even talking to them. That's when you get a smack in the face. Usually, it gets you a bit wound up but you can ignore it. This time, however, they've just gone too far.

You'd only nipped out to the lav for a second and when you come back they've nabbed your girlfriend, Madonna! Well, this calls for immediate action. Off you run into the street to give chase.

Unfortunately, at this point you discover that all the town's skinheads are in one gang and they're all trying to stop you from reaching Madonna. No sooner do you step on the pavement than a string of thugs rush at you. You

On first sight, the arcade version of Vigilante seems far too difficult – after a few goes, however, you soon get into the swing of things. The Amiga version on the other hand starts off incredibly difficult and stays that way. It's hardly fair that the enemy characters move about four times as fast as you so that you can only shuffle along the pavement a couple of steps before several hard men clatter into you. This wouldn't be so bad if the defensive moves were a little more accessible, but after mashing the joystick around for ten minutes I still couldn't get a sensible move out of the thing. It's shame really, as it could have been brilliant, but it isn't – it's just all right.

▲ Are you man enough to rescue Madonna? Or will you just run away because you didn't like her songs in the first place?

CORDO

Well, I disagree with Maff on this once, since I found the conversion of Vigilante to be very close to the coin-op original. The graphics are pretty accurate, if a bit small and squat, and the sound more or less mimics the arcade version (ie, not very much of it, and that limited to yaaa and ouff). As for the gameplay, the joystick handling and the logic on your opponents has been tweaked a lot since the first version we saw, and the whole thing isn't as hard as it was. It'll still take you a long time to complete the first couple of levels, but it's definitely worth persevering; and if you were a fan of the coin-op, you should take a look at this – particularly at that brilliant price.

.. COMIN' IVE GOT MEGAWER BOOTS ON!

swiftly get rid of them by punching and kicking them over. Oh, sorry didn't I mention that you're a Martial Arts expert? Well, now I have.

There are quite a lot of skinheads around, so it's lucky for you that other fighting type people have dropped Nunchukkas on the pavement for you to use. WHAM! Ooops! A skinhead punches you in the face and you lose your weapon.

Eventually you see the van that the gang have stashed Madonna in, but it's guarded by a big nasty looking brute that takes some beating before he'll lie down like a good boy, allowing you to follow the van to the skinheads' junkyard hangout. Here you must wend your way through wrecked cars, fighting off the skinheads. At the end of the yard two mean brothers somersault all over the place trying to stamp on your head.

Once these bad sons of... er... you know... have been dealt with, the van speeds off again across the city bridge, along which the skinheads race their motorbikes.

Next is the fairground scene with you battling through a carnival scene to get to the construction works, where you must walk along the girders belting the thugs to rescue the fair Madonna (hasn't she dyed her hair dark now? Sorry, bad joke)

And after all that, you can return home and let your hard-man espadrilles cool down.

JOURNEY TO THE CENTRE OF THE EARTH

Rainbow Arts/US Gold, C64 £9.99 cassette, £14.99 disc; Amiga £24.99

The time is the late 19th century. After many months of being feared missing, a group of explorers, led by the eminent Professor Lidenbrock, return to civilisation.

In front of hordes of bustling pressmen, they relay to the world that they have just returned from a quest to a completely new country. What makes their story so difficult to believe is their claim that this country does not exist on the Earth but lies inside its very core.

Of course, being the cynical bunch that humans are, their story is dismissed as lies. Well, would you believe it? Erm... well you would actually. 'Cos this is the bit where you come in.

You see, a handful of people have speculated for some time that such a kingdom actually exists. You (probably because a brick fell on your head when you were six) are one of these people.

Approaching Lidenbrock, you put to him the proposition of returning to this underground world with you in tow. After some hesitation, he actually agrees, and begins preparation for the journey.

The date of the expedition arrives, and you set off for Iceland, and the volcanic mountain Sneffles (Sneffles?), where the quest is to begin. The game starts here.

Choosing one of four characters, you descend into the volcano and, with the aid of a map left by a previous explorer, enter the depths of the Earth's core. There's danger everywhere - rockfalls, stampeding mammoths and vicious pterodactyls (no relation to our own Herman, of course).

Action sequences which involve dodging and avoiding these dangers intersperse an analysis screen. Direction arrows let you explore the surrounding area (info comes back in messages - you Aaargh! Help! It's Around The World In 80 Days come back to bore me to death. Eeek! Just when you thought it was safe to come back out of the cupboard, they've come up with another of these interesting-sounding exploration games. Thing is, that's all they do - sound interesting. When you actually get down to it, all there is to the magical underground journey is a bit of dodging, a bit of watching a static screen and (on the 64) ages waiting for a really mind-numbing multiloader. If you really want to make it to the Earth's core, get a shovel and start digging - it'll be a lot more fun.

▼ A balance of strategy and arcade skills is required if you're going to meet those dinosaurs at the centre of the earth (Amiga)

▲ Aaargh! Watch out for those falling rocks! (Thud!) Too late... (64)

CORDO

Most of this fantastic journey is just spent staring at a basic map and when one of the sub-games does decide to appear, it's just a case of dodging left or right to avoid 1/4e oncoming 'perils'. At least the Amiga game looks and sounds nice... Of course no one expects the 64 to match up to that, but that's no excuse for gaudy colours, blobby sprites and abysmal sound effects. What hammers the final nail in the 64 coffin is the horrendous multiloader. Brilliant idea that - to load in each message for every room separately! I really enjoy spending 50% of my playing time waiting for the disk. (Irony warning).

don't get to see anything) and you can adjust your daily food and water supplies, use your first aid kit, set sleeping times and make use of rock analysing equipment vital in plotting your course further into the Earth's crust.

Success in your journey will lead to untold fame and riches. Failure will mean death, thousands of feet below ground. And we don't want that now, do we Eric?

AND

While the Amiga version of Journey To The Centre Of The Earth abounds with very good digitised stills of caverns, as well as a generous smattering of effective sampled sound effects, the C64's game is a mixture of really weird blobs of colour and basic sound. What the two programs do have in common, though, is the gameplay. There just aren't any long-term lasting qualities here. The majority of the game is spent pressing one of the direction arrows, hearing some footsteps, and reading about the surrounding area. Hardly epic material, is it?

REALM OF THE TROLLS

Rainbow Arts/US Gold, C64 £9.99 cassette, £14.99 disk; Amiga £24.99

No-one's ever satisfied, are they? There you are, half of the known civilisation under your people's control, and what do they want? More, that's what. Greedy lot.

'Go and hassle the trolls a bit', you're told. It's all right them saying that—they're not the ones who are going to get badly beaten about the head and neck, lost, cold, wet and generally not very happy, thousands of feet under the ground, tramping through unknown, unmapped troll-infested caverns.

But, they're the bosses. And anyway, you'll have a little bit of help. Yep. Your scientist friends have very kindly kitted you out with a clever little matter atomiser jobby, to destroy the very fabric of the earth (only little bits, mind). And you do have your handy magic bolts for protection.

So, get yourself into that telepod, set the right co-ordinates (no beaming yourself to some nice, sunny beach), and do the business of sorting those little brown devils out.

(N.B. There's a construction set

▼ Cutesy graphics characterise the Amiga version; but the platforms 'n' ladders action is much the same... (Amiga)

I didn't think I'd go a bundle for Realm Of The Trolls before I saw it but though I'm not exactly mad keen on platform games, I found it quite a good laugh, for a while. One thing I was rather pleased with was the general presentation of the game itself. While background graphics are a tad on the dreary side, there's some interesting animation on the main character and the troll bad-dies, as well as a lot of nicely drawn objects to collect on the way and add to your score. There's a meaty, beaty tune on the Amiga loading screen, which compensates for the dreary game effects — mostly strange whoops and whizzes (sampled on the big machine, not so sampled on the little brother). As with the vast majority of platform games, you are bound to get a bit sick of playing after some time but there is the built-in construction kit which lets you rip the game to pieces and put it back together should you get a bit bored.

"RANDY'S"
A

▲ Realm of the Trolls is another game which reflects the topsy-turvy quality of German software (64)

included in the game as well, if things start getting a bit tricky, and you just want an easy life! Damn, that bit doesn't go with this story very well.)

Whatever else it might do for you (and we'd better not go too much further into that) nobody can say that Realm Of The Trolls pushes either Commodore to its limits. Forget involved gameplay, exciting graphics and brilliant sound-tracks 'cos if you start thinking too much about that sort of thing, you'll make yourself ill. So if it hasn't got all of those things, what exactly has it got? Bit of climbing, bit of collecting, bit of shooting and that's it. Not much to show for your 10 or 25 quid. In fact, I just can't stop myself thinking of all the other things you could buy with that sort of cash...

Realm Of The Trolls is a real 'love it or hate it' game. Basically, if you can't stand levels and ladders, you won't like this. The biggest pull Realm of the Trolls had for me was the brillo music at the beginning. Unfortunately, the C64 version has nothing in the way of music — bit disheartening, I thought. Still — there are some well-drawn sprites kicking around the dungeons and though the backdrops are all black, they create a sort of dark, suspense-filled atmosphere. The construction set helps prolong the game's life, too. If you're dead against platform games, you'd be well advised to steer clear of Realm of the Trolls, or at least get a good look at it beforehand. Otherwise, buy it, but don't expect too much.

ROBOCOP

Ocean, Amiga £24.95

● I'd buy that for a dollar – or even 25 quid!

Come on, do I really have to tell you the plot of the film? Is there anyone out there who hasn't actually seen the film? Well, I know one... or maybe two... OK, OK!

Alex Murphy is a cop transferred from a pretty safe area to the dangerous Old Detroit precinct. On his first day out, he is brutally murdered by a gang of bank robbers and left a physical wreck. Meanwhile, the powerful

The actual film Robocop is one of my all-time favourites and the coin-op managed to capture a lot of the atmosphere of the movie. The Amiga version does pretty much the same thing – starting with the intro sequence and followed by the accurate arcade-quality graphics of the game itself. Rather than going for an all-out conversion, Ocean have gone for a 'half and half' format combining the best bits from the arcade version and adding strategy elements. The game is tough and will take some completing but rather than a chore, I'm sure that it will be an enjoyable experience. See for yourself – buy Robop today!

He's mean, he's tough, he's made of metal and he walks just like he does in the movie – oh yeah and the coin-op, of course. In fact, it looks, plays and feels a lot like the arcade machine, even though the gameplay itself isn't exactly the same. The graphics are slick, the action is tough (when I say tough, I mean really tough) and the strategy and arcade elements really work together well. The heads in the photofit section are digitised which makes fitting them together a realistically creepy affair. Fancy blowing a few namby pamby criminals away and throwing together some grisly looking chins and ears? Right then, shove loads of baby food into your mouth, start practising the robotics and rush out to your friendly software dealer NOW.

▲ The photofit section – you have a limited amount of time to correctly match up the face on the left with that on the right

OmniConsumer Products – the company that runs the police in Detroit – are due to build a new complex named Delta city. With huge robot guards (Enforcement Droid 209) being used to keep the peace. However, at a meeting of OCP officials, the ED-209 prototype malfunctions and kills an executive.

Bob Morton steps in with his plan – to use newly-killed cops in the murder of one Alex J Murphy. The memories begin to stir...

The information leads him to a warehouse where the gang that killed him hang out. Here he learns of the corruption in the OCP company, one thing leads to another (like several levels later) and he ends up at the OCP building for the final confrontation. Round of applause, please.

▼ Still on Level One, eh? Yup – it's THAT tough robot frames for better efficiency. Thus the Robocop program is started, with Murphy being virtually brought back from the dead and placed in a robot body.

You play the part of Murphy in his quest to clean up the streets of Old Detroit. The action begins with him walking along the streets fending off attackers with a well-aimed punch or two.

Next he comes across armed criminals and so takes out his leg-mounted machine-pistol to fight his way along. The end of the level pits Robocop against a biker which has to be punched off his mount to be destroyed. Somehow that biker looks familiar...

Not that he's got time to think about that. There's a vicious ED-209 right in front of him and Murphy's got to get rid of him before he can go to the photofit screen to identify the biker (the one he took out before, remember). When he finds the ID, the face is linked with

Gary Lineker's HOTSHOT

Gremlin, C64 £9.99 cassette, £14.99 disk

Poor old England haven't been having the best of times, lately, have they? One of the culprits responsible for the demise of our once great soccer establishment is a certain Mr Lineker, so it seems like a spot of bad timing on Gremlin's part to put out a game advertising young Gazza as 'England's top striker'. Oh well... let's get on with the review.

Gary Lineker's Hotshot! is yer average, honest-to-goodness footer game. Played from a birds-eye view, in much the same way as Microprose Soccer, you must kick, dribble and hack your team KAT Aaaargh! Footy games are fast catching up on the shoot 'em up in terms of quantity. While Gremlin's effort isn't what I'd call a classic, it's certainly not the worst. Graphics are a little on the jerky side, and the pitch is a bit bland, but the players are fairly well defined, and run about quite realistically. There are a lot of options, and all the moves you'd expect in a footy sim are here - I personally like the way you can kick the other players in the shins, and get away with a silly card. Great fun! What we have here, then, is a basic footballing game, and that's that. While not in the same league (ho, ho) as Microprose Soccer or Emlyn Hughes, Hotshot! is a competent enough kickabout - and it's a lot warmer than the real thing.

▼ Just some of the phrases heard in ZZAP! Towers this month: 'Go get 'em Gazzal!'; 'Gazza Linner bites yer legs'

"HE'S ALIVE AND WE'LL CHALLENGE ANYONE WHO SAYS WE'RE WRONG"

"I AM THE ELEPHANT THING"

AVAILABLE MOVES

KICKING - including flick and overhead kick. Select power of shot on power bar.

TACKLE - fire and you'll go straight into a sliding tackle.

DEFLECTION - may rebound off or be controlled by the player. Applies to post and crossbars as well.

HEADER - in the direction the player is facing.

THROW-INS, CORNERS, GOALKICKS - select direction and kick.

FOULS, FREE KICKS, PUNISHMENTS - if a player fouls repeatedly, he may be booked and/or sent off.

through the Football League, your goal (geddit?) being to reach the top of the First Division.

All the usual footballing features are here: overhead kicks, throw-ins, headers and that most despised species - the referee. Yep, he's here as well - ready to give you a good ticking off when you foul someone.

On loading, you are greeted with a comprehensive options menu, allowing you to alter the make-up of your game: picking players' shirt colours, choosing colour and style of the pitch (either grass or astroturf) plus deciding on the length of the match and the division you wish to begin in.

So, pull the boots on, get out there and - who knows? - you may be in line for the next England manager's job. (Well, someone has to be, don't they!)

"EDDINGTON! BARMY POLMY!"

OK, OK, I admit it - I was the kill-joy who didn't think as highly of Microprose Soccer as the rest of the known universe seemed to. I just found it a bit silly, that's all. Saying that, though, it was an outstanding piece of programming, and there were bound to be pretenders to its throne. Which is where Gary Lineker's Hotshot! comes in. Up until now, I've not thought much of Gremlin's Lineker tie-ins, so it came as a surprise to find myself enjoying this one. It's not the best I've seen, and it's very much in the Microsoccer mould, but it's pretty passable as a football game, though maybe a tiny bit slow. There's a detailed front end, which is pretty important in a footy game, though some of the options are a bit strange. Who wants a blue pitch anyway? Not the greatest football sim ever, but still a lot of fun.

WAR IN MIDDLE EARTH

Melbourne House, Amiga £24.99

● Frodo, Pippin and Merry sort out their tactics in glorious 16-bit

When JRR Tolkien wrote his chronicles of Middle Earth, he wasn't simply creating a legend, he was generating a whole new world – a parallel civilisation, where men exist amongst elves, dwarves and hobbits and where the enemy isn't a fellow race, but the force of evil itself. Where magic works and decides the fate of the populace.

The beginning of this story isn't exactly earth-shattering. A hobbit burglar, by the name of Bilbo Baggins, tricks a pale-faced creature called Gollum out of a small, golden ring. This ring just happens to be the most powerful magical artifact on Middle Earth. Sauron, the ultimate evil force, had attempted to use it in a bid to take over Middle Earth but his plan failed and the ring was lost – until now.

The only way to ensure that its powers aren't used for evil again is to throw it into the crack of the volcano, Mount Doom. Unfortunately, Sauron has since got wind of the ring's discovery and has sent out his ghostly messengers, the black riders (or Nazgul) to find and retrieve the ring which is now in the possession of Bilbo's nephew, Frodo.

And it's as Frodo that you're charged with the mission of carrying and ultimately destroying the dangerous jewel.

Play is divided into three map-based sections. The main map shows the whole of Middle Earth, with units under your control shown as flashing dots. Using icons, you have the power to move the units, be they individual characters or whole battalions, by means of the second playing area.

This is a blown-up version of the first screen, showing the main map in more detail. As it covers several screenfuls of information, you use the mouse to scroll from location to location.

When meetings between characters or armies occur, the third playing area is utilised. This takes the form of an animation screen which displays the characters themselves as they interact: chat, rest, collect objects and fight. Further icons and menus (giving you a selection of possible fighting moves, for example) appear as your choice of action makes them necessary.

Much of your strategy will involve proving yourself to other forces of good and getting them to trust you. At the start of the action, the map is brimming with large numbers of potentially helpful people which you haven't yet got the power to control. Until you've taken them objects which prove your allegiance to the cause, they won't be interested in offering any aid.

There are an almost infinite number of ways to complete War In Middle Earth. Are you hobbit enough to try them out?

▲ Looks like there are one or two interesting things going on down there – I think it's time to investigate!

▲ One of the many scenes which has rather a lot of nice trees in it. From here you can access maps, attain the status of your party or just watch them walk by Im glad the latest adaptation of Tolkien's works wasn't another adventure because, fun as they may be, they don't have much scope for continued play once you've finished them. Which can't be said for War In Middle Earth: it might not be impossible to complete, but there loads of different ways to approach the game so you'll be playing for ages to come. Every little thing you do affects the eventual outcome, and a silly move, like forgetting to go to Rivendell for the rest of the Fellowship, could (and usually does) spell bitter defeat later on. The programmers have definitely made the most of the animation screen with lots of well-implemented touches such as characters limping if they've been wounded in battle! As long as you're not a totally way-out joystick junky, give this a really good go.

Can't say I was mad keen on the 64 version of War In Middle Earth, but I was impressed by its good points – especially the way it manages to coordinate everything and still stay fast enough to be playable. Well, the Amiga version's just as playable and it's got loads and loads of good points. The best thing about it is that it manages to combine different elements of strategy, adventure and arcade action and still come across as a really gripping wargame. It really manages to capture the atmosphere of the book: the struggles, the agony of defeat and the jubilation of victory. The graphics are of a high standard, especially on the animated screens and sound is admirable. They also make this a lot more accessible to people (like me) who wouldn't go out and buy a more traditional sort of strategy game. In other words – it's dead good. Go out and buy it.

Im not a staunch strategist, but I thoroughly enjoyed War In Middle Earth. Its sheer depth is just incredible! With the amount of events happening at the same time, the whole thing must really eat away at the computer's processing power. Everything is presented in a neat and concise way, from the informative and entertaining manual, to the uncluttered screens, to the limited icon use needed to carry out orders. Graphics are well above average (pretty unusual for a game of this type) with some lovely landscapes on the animation screens. And as if that's not enough, there are a veritable host of smashing tunes and effects that capture the game's atmosphere almost perfectly. You don't deserve an Amiga if you miss out on War In Middle Earth.

BALLISTIX

Psychapse, Amiga £19.95

Cor! I used to love playing Crossfire when I was a nipper. I had me tacky plastic gun, me little metal balls, and me magnetic puck thingy. Bang, bang, smack the puck off the side of the board, into the other player's goal - eee, t'were grand. And when that got boring, we used to fire the balls at each other... (don't try this at home, kids)

▲ Shades of Speedball in everything but addictiveness

RANDY
Games like this are made for two people! Don't get me wrong - Ballistix is still great fun as a one-player game, but it does get repetitive after some time. Graphics are nice and detailed, and the balls move around very smoothly; there are some great sound effects and a touch of atmospheric speech as well, but the title track is a bit weedy. Still a fab game, though, which I definitely recommend to Crossfire fans.

CORDO
When you see this for the very first time you think 'ah, Speedball'. Actually, it's nothing like it. It's practically the same as that old Crossfire boardgame, in fact. And while it's enjoyable for a while, play (just bouncing balls off a puck, into a goal) begins to get samey after a bit. It's nicely presented - with a big list of options - and sports some pretty graphics and clever sound effects; the title tune is very reminiscent of demo music, though! Fun for a while, but gets boring as a single-player game.

Life's been canny quiet since your grandfather, the original GoldRunner, defeated the evil pirate empire 50 years ago. Feet up, watch the telly, and let ▼ GOLDRUNNER!

(crackle crackle) doo-bee-doo GOLDRUNNER!
Oh no - that was the OTHER game, wasn't it?

RANDY
The big cafulle about GoldRunner was the nippy vertical scrolling, so it comes as little surprise to see the same on the sequel. Actually, most of GoldRunner II is similar to its predecessor: the sprites look the same, the backdrops look the same, the sound effects sound the same - they've even used the same spaceship on the box! I did find the game enjoyable for a while, but then (as with most shoot 'em ups), it started to get terrioly samey. If you like hard blasters, or were really hung up on GoldRunner, then check this one out. Otherwise, grab a glimpse first.

getting recharged, carting them off to bases up in space.

So off you blast to sort those blokes out, and get the robots back to safety. Failing that, just blow them up.

Easy, eh? Glad you think so!

MAFF
My, there's been a lot of vertically scrolling shoot 'em ups knocking around lately, hasn't there? Some are really good and some are ace: GoldRunner II lies somewhere in the middle. Although there's no real advancement over the prequel, it is fun for a while (everyone likes a good blast). Some of the graphics are a bit small, though the backdrops are nice, with interesting pictures of the Mona Lisa 'n' stuff. Slightly aggravating music and run-of-the-mill speech and effects keep up the aural side of things and add some atmosphere to what is basically an average blast.

F-14 TOMCAT

Activision, C64, £14.99 disk only

Wanna do a Tom Cruise? Yes? Well, jump in your F-14 Tomcat fighter jet, and shoot off to the Top Gun Naval Fighter Weapons School, 'cos F-14 Tomcat is the latest in the long line of jet combat flight simulators to hit the streets.

Designed with the arcade buff in mind, as well as hard core sim freaks (stay cool, man), the game gives you the chance to defend America against hostile forces across the globe in any of 80 separate scenarios. Just you and the Navy's F-14 out there, saving the skies. Hard or what?

Controlling the world's most powerful carrier-based jet combat fighter is no easy task. Thankfully, F-14 Tomcat doesn't hurl you right in at the deep end. Your first two tours of duty are carried out in the Navy's jet fighter simulator, giving you the chance to show the Admiral exactly what you're made of (jelly), before earning your wings and playing the game for real.

Nobody lets you near a plane though, till you've embarrassed yourself trying to pass a rigorous identification test designed to determine your knowledge of the hardware under your control. Fail and you're out on your ear. Succeed and you're on your way to the aircraft carrier USS Nimitz – one of the privileged few to become an F-14 fighter pilot.

There's a whole array of different controls: as well as the more usual speed up/slow down, rudders etc, there's a choice of four different types of armoury, including the Phoenix AA missile, exclusive to the US Navy, and the more common Sidewinder. More unusual are the keys to authorise

I've never been the world's greatest simulator freak – normally I end up marvelling at the technology but getting a bit bored by all the different regulations and controls. Not in F-14 though. It didn't take me that long to get the hang of the controls and after half an hour or so I actually started to enjoy the game. And that's what this is, really – a game, not a simulator. The graphics are competent and the sound's pretty adequate, but when you get down to the actual flying, there just isn't that much simulator there. Great if you're a bit of an ignoramus as far as flight sims go but not if you're the kind of experienced well-hard simulations ace likely to want a product like this. Oh well...

▼ Looks like somebody took a wrong turning somewhere, doesn't it?

"RHH! THE DMS OF AT THE EPOUTS COME"

GORDO

You just have to take one look at the technical simulation-style packaging to see that this hasn't been designed with your average arcadester in mind. Pity, because your average arcade player is likely to get a lot more pleasure out of this than a simulations freak. The presentation's pretty nifty, with lots of little inbetween action features – but when you get down to the gameplay there isn't really enough there to involve an experienced hard core simulation fan.

▲ You're into fast cars and fast food – now grab hold of a fast plane and blast dem enemies firing and send a warning message to hostile aircraft.

After each sortie, you are transferred to the USS Nimitz, where the Admiral will advise you on your performance and future prospects, as well as whether you're going to receive a medal or get promoted. Make a right mess of everything by crashing or ejecting though, and you'll find yourself bobbing in the sea, up against a court martial or even rotting in a Middle Eastern prison. And you won't need your after shave in there, me old son.

Decorations and promotion (you start out as an enthusiastic but 'wet behind the ears' Ensign), as well as less favourable reports, can be saved to a log for ongoing play and so affect your position in the ranks.

Eat you heart out, Tom.

Unlike Stealth Fighter et al, F-14 Tomcat is much more arcade orientated than the norm. Whether this is to attract a wider audience than hard-core flight simulators usually receive I don't know. What I do know, is that it hasn't been hugely successful in achieving a balance between the two genres. Presentation-wise, the game is excellent, with an easy to understand manual, and loads of different screens to represent different actions. Sound isn't exactly fantastic, and enemy plane animation could have been better, but that's still not my main gripe. Nope – the game just doesn't give any real challenge as a simulator. Controls which you'd think were standard aren't there, so realism is diminished. And when you get down to it, that's what counts in a game like this.

PRESENTATION 87%
Concise, uncluttered manual. A wealth of options, backed up by animated screens. Pilot save option.

GRAPHICS 79%
While fill-in screens and cockpit displays are excellent, poor enemy animation and lack of ground objects disappoint. Movement is speedy and fluent, though.

SOUND 46%
A couple of tunes and some so-so jet and explosion noises.

HOOKABILITY 79%
Its simplicity of play will appeal to most players.

LASTABILITY 58%
Lack of content ensures eventual loss of interest from simulation fans.

OVERALL 67%

An attempt to combine arcade popularity with simulation skills which doesn't quite hit the mark.

RIDE THE SKIES WITH SIZZLING SILKWORM!!

Take a trip in a 'copter and win vast amounts of games from Sales Curve!!!
Hurrah!!

AK PREVIEW TAPE

Super Sales Curve shoot 'em up Silkworm sizzles sexily (now try saying that while gargling with pond water . . .) this issue with the incredibly dead brill scores of 91% on the 64 and 93% on the Amiga! (Naaayyyah! Guurrrghr! – Kati)

Cor, don't you just wish you could have a copy of your very own - free?! (Oooo, yus please! – five billion ZZAP! viewers) An' don't you just wish that someone would take you and your bestest mate up in a helicopter just like in Silkworm? And wouldn't it be mindblowingly thrilling to have a day out with Sales Curve and the programming team Random Access playing their arcade machines and seeing the four up 'n' coming Sales Curve titles: Gemini Wings, Ninja Warriors, Continental Circus and Shinobi.

It would, without doubt, be spiffing. So it's quite a coincidence that ZZAP! have teamed up with Sales Curve to offer these prizes in this, the one and only-ish, Silkworm comp! The lucky first prize winner, and their friend or parent, will spend a day in London with Sales Curve. And this is what you'll be getting up to . . .

- A helicopter trip over London!!!
- Meet programmers Random Access !!
- Play on the arcade machines!!
- See Gemini Wings, Ninja Warriors, Continental Circus and Shinobi being programmed!!!

- Get a copy of Silkworm!!!

- Win the other four games when released!!!

What a package! (Gnuk gnuk!) For TEN not-so-lucky-but-still-quite-lucky runners up Sales Curve are offering copies of all five games as they are released through the year from Virgin.

To win, answer the three questions and bung your answers on a postcard or on the back of a sealed rotor blade and send it to: I'M SILKY, FLY ME COMPETITION, ZZAP! TOWERS, PO Box 10, Ludlow, Shropshire SY8 1DB, to arrive no later than May 11. Have a 'nice' day.

LITTLE COMPUTER PEOPLE

Ricochet, £1.99 (Rerelease)
Reviewer: Paul

"I'M ONE!"

All the things that go wrong with C64s were explained a few years ago when a lone programmer by the name of David Crane discovered a little person living inside his computer. Intrigued by the little chap he decided to encourage him to come out of hiding by building him a house, furnished with all mod cons, such as his own micro, a record player, TV and a piano. As it turned out, these LCPs (as they are known) are very friendly, enjoying the odd conversation or a dance.

But remember – you've got to keep them fed well or they could turn ill.

All the initial reviews of the Little Computer People Discovery Kit were of the disk version, which has a lot more depth than the tape version. Not that it was a bad thing releasing it on tape, as tape users shouldn't really be excluded. If you haven't seen it before and you like pets then it is worth checking out, but the lasting appeal may be a little limited.

BOMBFUSION

Mastertronic, £1.99
Reviewer: Maff

A very dangerous situation has arisen: a terrorist group has planted bombs throughout a nuclear processing plant, which could cause it to explode, taking most of the Northern Hemisphere with it. Only you can save the day: you must enter the plant and return the fusion cells to their protective container by catching them and making them follow you. This must be done whilst dodging falling rocks that cause the cells to escape and defusing the terrorist bombs before they push the radiation level sky high.

And that, basically, is it. That's all the game consists of – catching the cells and putting them in a box. Exciting eh? Well, no: it's dead boring. All the levels look very similar, with small, bland sprites and platforms depicting the repetitive action. The only way that the levels get harder is in the increasing number of cells to collect. Hardly compelling gameplay in anyone's book; a poor release even at two quid.

ACTION FORCE

M.A.D, £2.99 (Rerelease)
Reviewer: Kati

The forces of Cobra have attacked the small, peaceful island of Botsneda. The civilian inhabitants of the island have been evacuated, but the speed of the operation resulted in vital information being left behind in the Eastern sector. The Cobra force presence intensifies, making it necessary to send in an attack force to retrieve the information. This is a job for Action Force. You play the part of Wild Bill, ace helicopter pilot, and you must protect the AWE Striker vehicle on its journey across the island, blasting obstacles in its path and defending it from airstrikes.

Once I'd worked out what the hell was going on in Action Force I realised that there wasn't much to do other than blast bits off the scenery and crash into the enemy aircraft. Yes that is right, crash. Your ship takes so long to turn that they've hit you before you even face them. Success is more luck than judgement – not the perfect strategy for any game; and it's this factor above all that makes Action Force not worth spending too much time over.

HEAVY METAL PARADROID

Rack-It, £2.99 (Re-release)

A message has been received from a fleet of space freighters in the depths of space. The droids aboard eight dreadnought ships have malfunctioned and trapped the remaining crew members on the bridge. The message was intercepted three days ago and the trading council don't hold out much hope for the survivors...

The only thing to do is to beam in a remote controlled influence device to look around. This is a floating helmet-type machine that can plug into and control other droids.

Early evidence gleaned from probe droids has shown that all life on the ships has been destroyed, so the only thing left to do is to clear the ship of all robots. This can be done by shooting, ramming or taking over a droid. The influence device is armed with lasers but other weapons can also be used.

To take over a droid, a subgame is entered, which consists of circuit-like lines joining a central section, which must be changed so that the majority of it appears in your colour.

Just when you think a game can't get any better, a company releases another version that improves on the theme. The original Paradroid was an amazing game, and when the fast version appeared on the Uridium+ double pack I thought that it was the ultimate version. Now we have the Heavy Metal edition, complete with superbly hard looking walls and title screen - and it only costs three quid! How can anyone afford to be without a copy of Paradroid now? I'll tell you - you can't. Go and buy it immediately! Now then, Hewson, how about an Amiga version?

CORDO

This has got to come close to winning the 'Greatest 64 Game of All Time' award. The graphics are hard and well drawn with ultra-smooth scrolling, the sound amazingly atmospheric and the gameplay incredibly compulsive. The game hardly seems to have aged in the three and a half years since its release, probably due to the refinements that have been added as it has gone along. The revamped price of £2.99 helps as well, pushing it head and shoulders above other games for value alone. Even if you've got the other versions, it's worth checking this out, if only to complete the collection - and what a classic collection it is!

PRESENTATION 94%

Excellent layout, superb 'techno' appearance, brilliant introductory instructions, very neat in-game touches. And don't forget the great loading sequence!

GRAPHICS 89%

Smooth scrolling and decks now in two shades of metal! The sprites are more functional than amazing.

SOUND 82%

Brilliant warbling robots and effective laser noises.

HOOKABILITY 87%

TURBO ESPRIT

Encore, £1.99 (Rerelease)

Reviewer: Gordon

Trouble is brewing in the city: word has it that a gang is planning to move a huge drugs shipment into its heart. You (who else?) must drive your Lotus Esprit Turbo through the streets tracking down the gang members, ready for the exchange. Your onboard computer can help you by locating the gang's vehicles on a street map, but it's up to you to dispose of them by shooting or ramming, always keeping an eye out for civilians!

This is one of the most boring games I have ever played. Driving down a seemingly endless straight road for about half an hour, waiting for a drugs exchange that never happens is not my idea of fun. The whole thing is depicted using some abysmal graphics and worthless sound effects... in fact, put plainly, it's rubbish. Avoid - or you'll regret it.

SPEEDZONE

Mastertronic, £1.99

Reviewer: Maff

Stories have been around for many years about the Bermuda triangle - the area of sea where things disappear mysteriously without a trace - and now a similar anomaly has been found in outer space. Many ships have vanished without leaving a clue: no messages have been intercepted and no wreckage found. The first ship to be lost was a freighter of the Sarek-Kholinor line and the anomaly was named after it. Scientists have decided that they want to know what lies within the SK

Anomaly, so YOU are sent into the Speedzone.

What a terrible shoot 'em up this is! The graphics are simply awful, the sound is hardly there at all and the gameplay... ugh! Thrashing a messy spaceship around, blasting even messier enemy spaceships isn't my idea of fun at all; one game of this is enough to convince you how bad it really is. What's the phrase? Ah yes, 'A waste of tape'.

AAARGH! (Melbourne House)

Stomp! Thud! Growl! And other monsterish noises! It's been almost a year since the release of Melbourne House's nasty creature game which was one of the first to demonstrate the Amiga's graphics. Now Aaargh! is due for release on the 64 so that 8-bit users can sample the delights of burning forts, destroying island villages, crumbling mountainside towns, smashing ancient temples and eating lots of people (very pleasant, I'm sure).

All of this is completely justified, you understand, as the point is to defeat the enemy monster and steal his eggs to allow access to the heart of the sacred mountain. Does that justify eating people? We're not sure. Nor are we sure what the gameplay's like, now that the flashy graphics have gone (they don't look too promising above, do they?) Check out the review soon, babeeee.

LORDS OF THE RISING SUN (Cinemaware)

Hands up all those people who remember the TV series Shogun. Ooh! That many eh? Hold on, I can't keep this up. I'm talking to myself here. Anyway, back to the acting...

Cinemaware's new game is based on the same sort of thing as Shogun, wheeling and dealing and fighting and something elsing in the far East. You play the lead character in a simulation of a Civil war in Twelfth Century Japan. Your father has been killed by the Taira clan, your bitter rivals, who have gone on to subvert the Emperor.

The game takes place in realtime with you in command of Samurai armies, fighting Ninja troops and negotiating alliances with other clans. Can you succeed in defeating your enemies and become Shogun or will you be forced to commit Hari kari? No prices are known as yet, but it should be available on the Amiga pretty damn soon, with a 64 version to follow.

FORGOTTEN WORLDS (Go!/Capcom)

Right, what do we know about this one? Well the game is to be converted from the Capcom arcade machine of the same name and features two hard men who like nothing better than flying around blasting several shades of sausage out of things.

The format is similar to Sidearms, with the addition of weapons purchasing and selection sections and a rather nicely done large dragon. It's all set on some planets somewhere, but we can't remember where... HAHA! From what we've seen the sprites are quite nice, as you can see from the Amiga screenshot, but you can't see the smooth player animation and scrolling, so you'll just have to wait for that. Expected prices for the 64 are £9.99 on cassette, £14.99 on disk with the Amiga disk costing £19.99, but this could change by the time the game is released. And that, as Orson Welles once said to his dog, should be any day now, Rover.

MILLENNIUM 2.2 (Activision)

Set two hundred years in the future, Millennium 2.2 details the story of a small group of human colonists on the moon. Why did they choose the moon? You can't grow vegetables there. Oh well...

The rest of the human race has been wiped out by a meteor striking the Earth, destroying the atmosphere and turning the planet into an uninhabitable rock. The martians see this as an opportunity to take over the planet, but the colonists must be wiped out first. The remaining humans believe that they can reconstruct the Earth's atmosphere, but they must hold off the Martians long enough to complete their task.

Actually, we were promised Millennium 2.2 for review this ish, but Activision changed their minds. After much persuading, they said we could have it after all... then changed their minds again at the last minute. AAAARGH! (Sound of heads being bashed against walls). Anyway, it should be available on the Amiga any day now, at a price of £24.99. Until then you'll just have to make do with a screenshot, I'm afraid. Boo!

BOMBER (Vektor Grafix)

Vektor's latest project is being programmed under license from Activision. Rather than a conversion, the game is an original title based on the tried and tested flight simulator format. Bomber pits you in a head to head contest with another plane. Zoom! Argh! Dakka-dakka!

Your craft can be selected from a menu which includes Tornado, F-15 Strike Eagle, F-4 Phantom, F-111, Saab Viggen and a Mig 27 Flogger. The opponent can also vary, selected from a menu of 14 adversaries. Accordg to Vektor, the planes will all be different, right down to their handling characteristics. The basic concept came from the USAF Strategic Air Command demonstrations involving planes from various forces, but it's now been taken a few years into the future with planes armed to the teeth ready to blast each other's gonads out of the skies.

You can't really get an idea of the 3D effect from the static screenshot above, so you'll just have to grab a look at the actual game when it appears on the 64 and Amiga.
